Tulalip Tribes Vision

We gathered at Tulalip are one people.
We govern ourselves.
We will arrive at a time when each and every person has become most capable.
Together we create a healthy and culturally vibrant community

Tulalip Tribes Mission

We make available training, teaching and advice, both spiritual and practical.

Tulalip Tribes Values

1. We respect the community of our elders past and present, and pay attention to their good words.
2. We uphold and follow the teachings that come from our ancestors.
3. It is valued work to uphold and serve our people.
4. We work hard and always do our best.
5. We show respect to every individual.
6. We strengthen our people so that they may walk a good walk.
7. We do not gossip, we speak the truth.

Tulalips welcome and honor First King Salmon

Photos/Article by Calvin Valdillez

At the Tulalip Tribes Annual Salmon Ceremony, Vice-Chairman Glen Gobin spoke passionately about the importance of keeping Tulalip traditions alive on Saturday June 11, 2016. Inside the Longhouse, the Vice-Chairman expressed how great it was to see Tulalip youth involved in the culture, stating that they are Tulalip's future generation, and teaching them the traditions of the Tulalip Tribes is top priority.

Glen asked for all of the fisherman and everybody who spent a large amount of their time on the water to come forward, and asked for blessings and safety throughout the season for the tribal members that now stood before him.

Traditional Tulalip songs echoed throughout the Longhouse as dancers in traditional regalia performed and the community members observed and enjoyed the ceremony.

The first salmon of the year was brought ashore, blessed and thanked for its sacrifice. The ceremony moved to the Donald Hatch Youth Center where a traditional feast was prepared. Before the ceremony concluded the remains of the first salmon were returned to the water, so that it's spirit can tell all the salmon in the area of Tulalip's gratitude, which results in a good season for the fisherman of Tulalip.

At a time of year when everybody feels extremely busy, and people are juggling work, graduations, holidays and social events, it was amazing and grounding to witness the community get together to carry on the traditions the Tulalip ancestors began.

Co-Stewardship Ensures Tulalip Cultural Traditions Live On

Article by Calvin Valdillez; Photos Courtesy of Libby Nelson

Annually, the Tulalip Tribes and the U.S. Forest Service hold a meeting regarding the Memorandum of Agreement (MOA) the two parties signed in 2007. The aforementioned MOA was created so that the Tulalip Tribes and the U.S. Forest Service can collaborate on the decision-making, planning, and counseling for the conservation of Tulalip's resources on off-reservation ancestral lands in the Mt. Baker-Snoqualmie National Forest. This year the meeting was held on May 12, 2016.

During 2016's MOA meeting Chairman Sheldon and Forest Supervisor Jamie Kingsbury signed an historic and important agreement, the "swədaʰxali Co-Stewardship Plan, 2016-2026". The agreement, a provision to the MOA, is a culture resource management plan that covers the swədaʰxali area over the next ten years. swədaʰxali or "Place of Mountain Huckleberries" is a 1,280-acre parcel in Tulalip ancestral lands in the upper Skokomish watershed that the Tulalip-Forest Service Co-Stewardship looks to enhance. One of the many reasons this is important to the tribe is the huckleberry.

Tulalip Mountain Camp 2015

Northwest huckleberries are generally picked in the late summer/early fall seasons, and grow in the damp areas of mountains. The huckleberry, known for boosting the immune system, has always had a strong relationship to the indigenous peoples of the northwest. Coastal Native American ancestors considered the huckleberry to be of the utmost importance because of the medicine the plant contains.

Inez Bill, Tulalip Tribes Rediscovery Program Coordinator, provided a foreword for the swədaʰxali Co-Stewardship Plan. In the foreword Inez spoke of the significance huckleberries and the spiritual connection Natives have with the berry.

Inez writes, "Huckleberry is a food and medicine to our people. Our ancestors visited certain areas for gathering these berries. They knew where the berries were growing, and what companion plants were growing there too and how to utilize them." Like fishing and hunting the huckleberry is essential to the Native American culture. Preserving these plants requires a lot of love and care. Inez stated that caring for the swədaʰxali area offers a chance to pass on the knowledge of the huckleberry and it's harvest to Tulalip's future generations.

"Through the teachings of how we value, take care of and utilize our environment, we pass down our history and traditions, and what is important to the cultural lifeway's of our people," said Inez. "This connection to the land enables us to know who we are as a people. It is a remembrance."

Tulalip Tribes Natural Resources Environmental Policy Analyst, Libby Nelson, agrees that passing the knowledge to the youth is essential to preserving Tulalip natural resources. The co-stewardship between the Tribe and the Forest Service is a way to ensure that Tulalip cultural traditions live on.

Libby states "Treaty rights encompass more than an opportunity to pick berries, hunt game or harvest fish. Having a meaningful role on the ground, in the stewardship of these resources, helps reconnect tribal peoples to these lands and the teachings of their ancestors".

Last year the Tulalip Tribes hosted it's first Tulalip Mountain Camp at swədaʰxali for the youth of the Tulalip community, and looks to make it an annual trip. Inez detailed the trip stating that the youth were able to experience a connection to the mountains and ancestral lands, which in turn allowed the youth to bond with their families and community members by sharing what they learned and observed during their experience.

Tulalip's Natural Resource Department and the Tulalip Youth workers will manage the swədaʰxali area incorporating both traditional practices passed down from the ancestors and western science while nurturing the plants.

Libby stated that the forestry department is set to begin work on the swədaʰxali area this summer. "As part of this plan, Forestry will be working on one of the major huckleberry areas this summer because it is threatened with getting shaded-out by conifers, which are small now and easier to move, as opposed to 2-3 years from now when they start to vault out and will be more difficult to get out."

The Natural Resource Department is looking to engage both summer youth workers and Tulalip Mountain Camp attendees to help remove the small conifers that are now about 2 feet tall and have as many as 22,000 per acre.

Tulalip Tribes Chairman Mel Sheldon and Forest Supervisor Jamie Kingsbury sign an historic and important agreement, the swedafzali Co-Stewardship Plan, 2016-2026.

According to a Seattle Times article from 1946, families camped, sometimes for the whole picking season, while gathering huckleberries. Gathering huckleberries was considered a fun social event where families from different tribes would travel to take part in the festivities including games, dances, and singing. Ceremonies were also held thanking the creator for the vitamin packed berry and asking for a blessed harvest.

Often referred to as a superfood, a huckleberry offers an abundance of benefits to its consumer. For example, these berries contain large amounts of antioxidants, which help aid in the prevention of many diseases such as cancer, diabetes and heart diseases. In today's society diabetes is a prevalent disease in communities all across Native America. The huckleberry is a reliable food that diabetics can enjoy without elevated blood sugar levels. Huckleberries are used in a variety of recipes including tea, pie, and jam. When used for medicinal purposes the huckleberry can be applied to treat pain, heart conditions, and infections.

The swədaʰxali Co-Stewardship Plan is an imperative provision to the MOA between the Tulalip Tribes and U.S. Forest Service, as evidenced by Inez in her conclusion. "Today, it is not only important that we continue the struggle to uphold our treaty rights, but we need to be involved in taking care of those resources our culture depends on so that they will be available for our future generations. This work at swədaʰxali is an expression of Tulalips sovereignty regarding our foods, and our commitment to support the dietary needs and the lifeways of our people."

about giving donors and community members, the opportunity to take action for the benefit of the Tulalip community, specifically the hundreds of children who daily attend and depend on the services of 'the Club', as it's affectionately been dubbed.

"The Boys and Girls Club is a special place for Tulalip. This year we celebrate our auction with the theme, 'Taking Action for the Community'," stated auction chair Rochelle Lubbers. "The Club lies in the heart of our reservation and in many ways is the heart of our community. Our working moms, dads, aunties, uncles, and grandparents rely on the Club to be a safe place where our children can be nurtured when they are not at home. Our family bonds in Tulalip are strong, the Club is an extension to that; with the children seeing staff as surrogate aunts, uncles, or grandparents"

The Tulalip Boys & Girls Club is the first club of its kind to be built on tribal land in Washington. Established in 1995, 2016 marks twenty-one years of commitment to the community. The Club promotes the health, social, educational, vocational and character development of boys and girls. Through before and after school programs, it aims to help young people improve their lives by building self-esteem, developing values, and teaching skills during critical periods of growth.

Serving as a model for those working to improve the lives of young people in the surrounding communities, the Club is the primary beneficiary of the annual fundraising auction. With each auction building off the success of the previous years, the Club has not only been able to sustain services, but to likewise complete much needed campus expansions that add additional learning and activity space. This includes spaces like the all new Computer Learning Center built in 2014 that allowed for our kids to stay on par with the area's best school when it comes to computer technology.

"Each year we come together and raise money that will improve our club in ways that would not be possible without the support of our dear 'Friends of the Club'. The learning, mentoring, playing, and team building that currently happens on a daily basis has a huge impact on our children, but there is so much more we could do," continued Rochelle. "Tulalip is taking a hard look at our gaps and realizing that teens continue to struggle and need more places where they feel safe, nourished, and comfortable. This year the Club is raising money to meet those needs and plan a space for our teens at a critical time in their development. We want our teens to stick around after their grade school years and mentor our children, but they need a space that fulfills their teen lifestyle; technology and creativity."

At the auction, there was an initial goal to raise $75,000 to build a multimedia center specifically tailored to the teen lifestyle. Thanks to the participation and contributions of those in attendance the $75,000 goal was easily surpassed and a total of $91,250 was raised for the future multimedia teen center.

That was just the beginning of an evening that saw previous auction records broken. It was announced that with more than 650 generous and caring people in attendance, the auction had set a new record for in-house attendance. Then came the biggie; with a record high in attendance came a record high in fundraising. It can safely be said that with sponsorships included this year's event raised just under $400,000, which is nearly $75,000 more than last year's event. "We are extremely proud of the efforts of the auction committee, the Club, our sponsors, and all those that turned out to support the Club on Saturday night," says Sam Askew, Tulalip Resort General Manager. "John Curley brought a level of energy that we've not had before and with that came new opportunities for bidding excitement and ultimately more funds going to support our kids. I'd also like to personally thank all those that donated. Whether it was time, effort, items or funds, YOU make a difference! Thank you."

On behalf of the Tulalip Boys & Girls Club, the Tulalip Tribes thanks everyone who contributed to the success of the 18th annual auction. The outpouring of support received each year from sponsors and volunteers is quite overwhelming. As in years past, the funds raised from the auction will ensure that our club not only continues to provide, but improves upon, quality programs in a fun, safe and positive environment that make it such a positive place for kids to attend.

Auction items included Native American artwork, jewelry, sporting events and memorabilia, and vacation and wine packages.

Jordan Jira and Katerina Hegnes (center) are the the Tulalip Tribes male and female senior student of the year.

In all there were sixty-two high school graduates and forty-one higher education graduates who, accompanied by their friends and families, convened for an evening to commemorate the rite of passage. There was entertainment, a catered buffet-style dinner, and plenty of motivational speeches from elders and their peers that reminded the graduates this is just the first step in the path to success.

“Graduation is my favorite time of year because we as a community uphold and congratulate our students’ academics,” says Board of Direct Theresa Sheldon. “We acknowledge students hard work and dedication to their grade point averages, attendance, and we celebrate their brains. We come together for positive support and thank our students for their achievements! When one Tulalip citizen obtains their diploma or degree, our entire Tulalip Nation benefits from your knowledge. Thank you for your brilliance and desire to keep fighting and to survive the school system. I absolutely appreciate you and am so excited to see where your next journey takes you. Thankful to everyone who shared pictures of our amazing students in their beautiful cedar caps. WOW...dx'łilap is looking amazing! Stay safe and congrats 2016 graduates!”

A special recognition ceremony honored the Tulalip Tribes male and female senior student of the year. Katerina Hegnes, a graduate of Lakewood High School, received the female student of the year honors. Katerina was very active during her high school years; participating in track, cross country, wrestling and cheer, all while advancing herself academically through the Running-Start Program at Everett Community College. She plans on attending Seattle Pacific University where she will study business management and fashion design. Jordan Jira, who was selected to numerous all-area teams for his stellar athletic performance on the football field at Lakewood High School, received the male student of the of year award. Jordan has earned himself a scholarship to Central Washington University where he plans to continue his academic and football career.

Congratulations to all those Tulalip Tribal students who put in the hard work and dedication to earn their graduate status. Chasing a dream requires your efforts and passion. The hard work isn't over now that you have graduated, it's only the beginning as you now prepare for the new challenges waiting in the next chapter of life. Good luck and congratulations!

Making Cedar Graduation Caps

"The creation story of Coast Salish people explains that there once lived a good man who always gave away his belongings and food to others. The creator recognized the man's kindness and declared that once the man dies, a red cedar tree will grow where he is buried and the tree will continue to help the people."

By Judy Gobin

This beautiful tree has provided so much for us such as clothes and canoes for travel, and today we have them being made into graduation hats, (mortarboards). I have for many years woven hats upon demand, for students here in Tulalip, and for friends from all over that order them for their children.

This year my daughter Toni Jo and I were asked to weave for our own graduates at Tulalip. I felt so honored to be asked and as I wove them I thought about our children.

This is the largest order we have done to date, the complete order was 105 hats! We started cutting and splitting in mid-February and completion was this week (June 9). The photos show the progress and what tools we used, and of course the picture of all the completed hats.

With the woven pieces ready, it's time to being putting the caps together.

Below: Tools used to create the caps.

Renewable/Clean Energy Careers

Jeanne Steffener, Higher ED

Renewable/clean energy is defined as energy gathered from resources that are naturally replenished and include: solar, wind, rain, tides, waves, biomass, radiant energy and geothermal heat. Renewable energy is collected in four (4) important areas: electricity generation, air and water heating/cooling, transportation, and rural (off-grid) energy services.

Renewable energy provides big benefits for our climate, our health and our economy in these forms:

- Minimal or no global warming emission
- Improved public health and environmental quality
- Inexhaustible energy supply
- Jobs and other economic benefits
- Stable energy prices
- A more reliable and resilient energy system

Renewable energy already supports thousands of jobs in the United States and globally. With the increasing use of renewable energy, the potential for enormous job creation will be available as we wean ourselves off of fossil fuel technologies. Job creation in the wind energy industry is employing full-time-equivalent employees in a variety of occupations including manufacturing, project development, construction, turbine installation, operations, maintenance, transportation, logistics, financial, legal, and consulting services. There are over 500 factories in the United States manufacturing parts for wind turbines. The solar industry employs approximately 100,000 people in either full or part-time jobs, in solar manufacturing, installation, and sales and marketing positions.

Renewable energies have morphed to include these other technological areas, hydro energy, ocean energy, and bio energy which employ even more workers.

In addition to creating new jobs, increasing our use of renewable energy offers other important economic development benefits. Local governments collect property and income taxes from renewable energy project owners. This revenue supports public services that are vital to the community. Many of these projects are located in rural areas where jobs are sorely needed. Owners of the lands where wind projects are located receive lease payments for power line easements or road right-away. Another possibility of payment maybe earning royalties based on the project's annual revenues. Other ways that farmers can generate supplemental income is through renewable energy production by producing feedstock for biomass power facilities.

Clean energy careers involve occupations created by energy conservation, alternative energy development, pollution reduction and recycling. A number of colleges and universities now offer specializations and degree programs in various clean energy resource areas. Community colleges can be a great resource for certificates and 2-year degrees offering clean energy credentials. One of the best resources for information on renewable/clean energy education and careers can be found at the U.S. Department of Energy's website. Check out this information at <http://energy.gov/eere/education/colleges-and-universities>.
