Assuming the helm: Theresa Sheldon talks about the Quil Ceda Village Council

By Niki Cleary

Quil Ceda Village is far more than the economic arm of the Tulalip Tribes; it's a municipality in its own right. In fact it's only the second federally recognized city in the nation. Founded in 2001, the QCV, like any other city, is governed by a city council and city ordinances. On June 16th, the current council, including newly appointed president, Theresa Sheldon, was sworn in along with Marie Zackuse and Glen Gobin.

"Historically the board members who did not hold an executive seat on council where assigned to represent the Quil Ceda Village Council," Sheldon explained. "Since I have no businesses myself, it makes me extremely unbiased when considering the types of development policies and laws that we should enact in the village therefore making it easier for me to accomplish the role of President of the city."

The Consolidated Borough of Quil Ceda Village has undergone a metamorphosis in the last two decades. Once a munitions dump, then leased to Boeing, this 2,000 acres is now home to over 150 businesses and sees over 60,000 visitors a day.

"Thankfully our past leaders put this city into motion over two decades ago to ensure we have the prospering economic development of today," Sheldon continued. "I'm grateful for the confidence of the board to fulfill this duty. Quil Ceda Village President is a one-year appointment, I was appointed with unanimous support from our tribal council.

"The role of the council and the president is laid out really well in the charter.

My duties are very straight forward, I preside over the monthly QCV council meetings, I'm the spokesperson of the village council, but I have no regular administrative duties or authority in the day to day operations. However, unlike the chairman of the Board, who only votes in case of a tie, I am a voting member of the Quil Ceda Village Council."

At the June 16th meeting the discussion ranged over a variety of topics including roads and infrastructure, tribal enterprises, and police and court services.

"We received an update on the 116th overpass construction project which will be an 18 month project and will begin in July," said Sheldon. "We will begin to replace the existing bridge with a wider bridge to provide an additional through lane in each direction and a double left turn to the I-5 ramps.

"This work includes additional pedestrian pathways across the interstate, will improve LED lighting, new signals and signage. Tulalip has been working on increasing capacity on 116th Interchange since 2001 and the Tribe has put in $23 million for this interchange. We have worked closely with WSDOT to ensure all safety measures will be covered as this project is considered massive with a lot of concrete, dirt, and gravel being brought in."

The Tulalip Market, formerly a simple gas station located on 116th Street at the North end of the Village, will now become the Tribes' drive-through smoke shop, deli, and gas station.

"It was interesting to hear about the product choices and details of the enterprise," said Sheldon. "We take for granted things like point of sale systems. When you go to a store, they just work. There are a lot of logistics that go into placing the systems. We use Chevron's system for gas sales and a different system for merchandise. All those systems have to speak to each other and seamlessly integrate for accounting purposes.

"I'm so thankful that we have staff in place looking at all the details as well as the big picture; I want to raise my hands to our Quil Ceda Village staff for working together to ensure we have a successful opening and a successful store, t'igwicid. The store will officially be open for business during the second week of July."

Like many other municipalities, the City pays for police and court services rather than retaining a city police force or operating its own court system. In this instance the Tulalip Police Department and Tulalip Tribal Court provide the services. In May alone, the Tulalip Police Department responded to 532 calls for services and conducted 72 traffic stops within the Village.

“From the beginning of the year until now, a lot of the calls were for suspicious vehicles (242 calls), shoplifting (279 calls), traffic stops (411) and trespass (110),” said Sheldon. “We averaged 3.6 assaults per month and 1.8 hit and runs. Anytime someone is hurt, it’s a big deal, but for the amount of visitors we see (60,000 daily), these are relatively low numbers.

“One of the ongoing concerns for tribal police is the transient encampments. Transient camps are a concern because they often have unsanitary or unsafe living conditions, and property damage can occur when squatters move into vacant buildings and properties. There’s also a safety concern from visitors about aggressive panhandling.

“The Tulalip Tribes and Quil Ceda Village staff believes in offering respect to every person, regardless of their path in life,” declared Sheldon. “We also absolutely support Tulalip Police in making decisions to address safety concerns.”

Of the cases filed at Tulalip Tribal Court approximately 28% of criminal cases, 33% of drug cases and 44% of “miscellaneous” criminal cases (mostly theft and trespass) originate in Quil Ceda Village.

“Tribal Court and the Prosecutors Office will be using the funding they receive from Quil Ceda Village to hire additional staff this year. Thankfully our court system runs effectively and our court staff does a great job making sure that all cases are processed and heard in a timely manner.”

Reflecting on the meeting,

Sheldon said she looks forward to creating a new strategic plan for the Village and encourages more Tulalip citizens to become involved if they would like to learn more about the cities operations.

“All Quil Ceda Village Council meetings are open to the public,” she said. “We hold monthly meetings, typically the 2nd Tuesday of each month. I want people to know we conduct these meetings in an open and transparent way and that we are constantly thinking of our future generation with every decision we make.”

Bright future for Tulalip ballfield

A major facelift is underway on the Alpheus “Gunny” Jones ballfield. The Tulalip Construction Department began turning dirt on June 1st and the work will continue through the end of November. Once complete, the field will be blanketed in synthetic turf similar to the product used in the UW Stadium and Century Link Field.

“The Construction team is excited to bring an exciting project to the community,” said Construction Manager Dave Boehme.

The all-ages field will be available for more than just baseball, the field will be multi-use, marked for football, soccer, baseball and softball. The artists rendering outlines the full vision for the multi-use fields. Future phases may include basketball courts, batting cages, and a walking trail as funding becomes available.

Neighborhood gets spruced up by youth

Article and photos by Brandi N. Montreuil

Tulalip Youth Council scattered through the streets along Tulalip Bay in an organized effort to clean up their neighborhood and encourage youth to take an active role in their community. A community clean-up took place on Tuesday, June 16 as part of the Tulalip Youth Council's participation in the Generation Indigenous (Gen-I) challenge.

The youth council formed in response to Gen-I, which was announced at the 2015 United National Indian Tribal Youth (UNITY) mid-year conference by President Obama. The goal is to engage Native youth by creating platforms where they can access information about opportunities and resources and help grow them as leaders. The challenge also gives youth the opportunity to voice their concerns about issues they face in their communities such as poverty, suicide and limited access to education and health care.

The June 16 clean-up was a great example of the council's top three goals, which include shedding light on environmental issues facing their community such as pollution, loss of salmon habitat and a new threat, coal trains, along with creating more positive opportunities for youth and becoming role models to future generations.

More than 20 youth participated in the clean up and zigzagged their way from the Tulalip Longhouse to the Tulalip Marina carefully combing through ditches and side streets to collect trash and other debris, such as car parts.

Youth celebrated after the event by having a bonfire before taking the trash out.

You can follow the Tulalip Youth Council and learn about future council meetings and events by liking their Facebook page.

Idle No More: Native Women Rising #ShellNo

Article/photos by Micheal Rios

Idle No More Washington organized a nonviolent, Native-led, peaceful resistance to the Shell Oil rig, ‘The Polar Pioneer’ that occupied the Port of Seattle Terminal #5 on Sunday, June 14. The resistance movement was named Native Women Rising #ShellNo. There was an open-invitation to all, Natives and non-Natives, to join in on the family-friendly event that featured Native American, Alaska Natives, and People of Color life-givers (women) who are defenders for the people, land, environment, the Arctic and the Salish Sea.

Sweetwater Nannauck, Director of Idle No More Washington, performs a blessing for all those attending the #ShellNo rally.

Native Women Rising #ShellNo was led by Indigenous women to continue the battle against Shell Oil’s efforts to drill in the arctic. Concerned citizens of the Earth gathered at the Don Armeni Boat Ramp in West Seattle to rally on land and later took to the waters to oppose Shell’s arctic drilling rig docked in Seattle.

Activists joined in a circle for drumming and singing, Native led prayer, and reminded those listening about the importance of the Alaskan wilderness soon to be drilled by the monstrous oil rig docked just a short distance away.

Participants in the Idle No More peace rally included front-line Native American environmental Protectors, such as Sweetwater Nannauck (Tlingit, Haida, Tsimshian), the Director of Idle No More Washington; Muckleshoot elder Donna Starr; Native youth speaker Ayanna Fuentes; Olivia One Feather; Last Real Indian’s Matt Remle; Jennifer Fuentes of the Buffalo Field

Campaign and the Naakw Medicine Dancers; Rosalinda Guillen, the Executive Director of Community to Community Development; Chiara Rose, the Girl on a Chain; Kshama Sawant from the Seattle City Council; and the Pinay Choir.

According to Idle No More, the Arctic and Salish Sea has sustained sacred life for a millennium. Natives and non-natives are unified in seeking spiritual guidance to bring a peaceful resolution to protect the Arctic and Salish Sea. Idle No More members raise their hands to honor the Coast Salish People on the sacred land and Salish Sea.

The #ShellNo movement is much bigger than Shell Oil’s use of the Port of Seattle Terminal #5 for their drilling rigs, and stopping the drilling in the Arctic. We, as protectors and caretakers of MotherEarth, must ask how can we can make a commitment in finding other sources of energy, revenue, and work that is not devastating to our traditional way of life, contribute to climate change, and rising sea levels. How can we seek other alternative energy sources beside the proposed coal and oil terminals, the transport of them through the State of Washington? It will take all of us working together to make this a world in which we can be proud of, and making a difference for our children. This Idle No More event was but one of many that have sparked hope and inspired Indigenous peoples throughout the United States, Alaska, and Canada to organize their own Idle No More chapters and events.

“We stand in solidarity with our First Nations brothers and sisters for treaty rights, water and land rights, and environmental protection of Mother Earth on the sacred land of our ancestors. As our elders taught us, ‘What we do today is not for us, but for our children, and our children’s children’,” explained Sweetwater, Director of Idle No More Washington. “I hope together we can do something that is befitting our ancestors love for this land, the Arctic, and Salish Sea. You are invited to join us and be Idle No More!”

The Swinomish Canoe Family partnered with fellow Natives to provide singing and canoe pulling at the peaceful rally.

Living Wise and Living Strong

Tribal elders from several different tribes have joined together to promote healthy lifestyles. These participants earned their medicine pouches and meet on a monthly basis, sometimes weekly, to maintain their goals and support each other with health goals to keep them living strong. Sponsored by Tulalip's Diabetes Care and Prevention Program, this program and these tribal elders who make it possible are affectionately known as the Wisdom Warriors.

The Wisdom Warriors program was created as a means to successfully link Native American elders with services and information on aging in a healthy and positive way. This valuable program ensures services to elders with a focused outreach method that centers on using culturally appropriate materials and a culturally relevant approach to make services available and effective. The goal is to provide an ongoing, incentive driven program that provides elders with the education, the support and the tools to make healthy choices resulting in lifestyles that promote self-care and longevity.

During the spectacularly warm and sunny afternoon of Tuesday, June 23, the Tulalip Wisdom Warriors held their monthly provider class at the demonstration gardens located within Jennings Memorial Park in Marysville. They were joined by the Tulalip Health Clinic's very own Dr. Kimberly Kardonsky, clinical specialist in Family Medicine, who spent valuable time with the Wisdom Warriors to discuss and actually perform exercise.

The exercise discussion was all encompassing, covering topics from why people exercise, why people don't exercise, countering excuses people come up with to not exercise, and learning chair exercises that anyone can do from home without needing any special equipment. Dr. Kardonsky and the Wisdom Warriors talked about what exercise looks like, what a pedometer is used for, and then discussed the many health benefits of proper exercise. Everyone agreed that exercise for elders is a mood booster, increases energy, decreases disability and hospitalizations, and overall increases health.

Following their discussion on exercise, Dr. Kardonsky led the Wisdom Warriors in several exercises that were performed while sitting in their chairs for a full minute at a time. Sit-down exercises included arm raises, chair walking and leg raises.

Wisdom Warriors held their monthly provider class in Jennings Memorial Park, where they learned new exercises that promote healthy living.

"Sometimes people tell me, 'I don't feel so steady on my feet' or 'I'm worried I'm going to fall', so these are exercises you can do while sitting, while watching TV even," says Dr. Kardonsky to the group of exercising Wisdom Warriors. "Some people think you can't build up a sweat while sitting down, but yes you can. There are different kinds of exercises. There's the cardio kinds that get your blood and heart pumping. There's strength, where you build up muscle. And then there's flexibility and balance, things like stretching or yoga or Tai Chi.

All of those different kinds of exercising have a role and I think as long as you are getting some of each your overall health will greatly benefit.

"You can talk to a hundred different health care providers and you'll probably get a hundred different ideas, but my thought is getting some exercise in every day or close to every day is really important. Even if you haven't exercised in a long time it's not too late to be physically active and you will benefit greatly from that. Whether it's going for a walk with a friend where you can catch up or doing some bursts of exercise while you watching your favorite show or working in your garden...it's all exercise that will promote a healthier lifestyle."

After the series of sit-down exercises, the Wisdom Warriors replenished their bodies with a healthy and energy filled lunch consisting of an assortment of fruits, coleslaw and turkey and chicken sandwiches.

Every elder who becomes a participant in the Wisdom Warrior program is committed to living a healthier lifestyle. The number of participants continues to grow as more tribal elders come together to prioritize health and wellness.

You are invited to join Wisdom Warriors and start your path to better health, with the support of your community. Class locations can vary. Please call 360-716-5642 or go to the Tulalip Health Clinic for more information.

Wisdom Warriors perform their newly-learned chair walking exercise.

The Power of Play

All children, regardless of age or ability, need time to play every day. Parents and caregivers should provide opportunities for play in a safe and age-appropriate environment.

Children are interested in learning about the world around them. They can explore their world through play, practice new skills, and expand their imagination. Playing with your child is not only fun, but it's one of the most important ways you can help nurture your child's development.

To maximize the benefits of play, keep these things in mind:

- Safety first: Make sure toys don't have small parts that fit into your child's mouth that could be a choking hazard.
- Follow their lead: Watch your child and see what kind of activities interest them and do what they want. Let your child determine how and what to play.
- Play with your child: You are their favorite toy! Get down on their level and let them crawl on you, or play blocks, do a puzzle or sing and dance.
- Repeat and Repeat again: Children love to do things with repetition. They may want to play with the same toy or activity again and again, and it's beneficial because some children like the sense of knowing what to expect. It provides them a sense of security and control.
- Songs and Rhymes: Children enjoy songs – especially those with hand motions. Words are easier to learn when they rhyme or are put to music. Encourage your child to sing with you.
- Hands-On Learning: Using hands and fingers to push buttons or open boxes helps children learn about how the world works. Many children also like to paint with their fingers, use play dough and play with sand.

- Involve friends: Having fun with peers is an important way for children to learn social skills like sharing, taking turns, and resolving conflicts. Invite friends to your home or meet at a park.

The many dangers of fireworks and illegal fireworks

With Independence Day and Boom City fast approaching us, we thought we could inform the community about the dangers of fireworks and illegal fireworks. While most people will enjoy their Fourth of July barbeques and watch the fireworks on the television, some of us will participate with our own firework show. We are writing this to inform our local community about the dangers and risk that come with fireworks. In recent years, fireworks have been one of the leading causes of injuries serious enough to require hospital emergency treatment.

Fireworks can result in severe burns, fractures, or scars or even death or disfigurement that can last a life time.

The thousands of serious firework related injuries each year typically harm the eyes, head or hands, and are mostly reported in states where fireworks are legal. Even sparklers, which are considered by most to be harmless, reach temperatures of more than 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit. On Independence Day in a typical year, far more U.S. fires are reported than on any other day, and fireworks account for two out of five of those fires, more than any other causes of fires.

Here are some quick facts about fireworks. In 2011, fireworks caused an estimated 17,800 reported fires, including 1,200 total structure fires, 400 vehicle fires, and 16,300 outside and to other fires. These fires resulted in an estimated eight reported civilian deaths, 40 civilian injuries and $32 million in direct property damage. In 2012, U.S.

hospital emergency rooms treated an estimated 8,700 people for fireworks related injuries; 55% of 2012 emergency room fireworks-related injuries were to the extremities and 31% were to the head. The risk of fireworks injury was highest for young people ages 15-24, followed by children under 10.

Another danger the community should watch out for is, illegal fireworks. There is difference between consumer grade fireworks and, illegal or professional grade fireworks. In the next few paragraphs we will go the difference between consumer and illegal, please remember this information when it comes to enjoying your Fourth of July fireworks this season.

Consumer fireworks, are regulated by the Consumer Product Safety Commission, are packaged in bright colors and have safety warnings on the package. The packaging sets forth the country of origin, which is normally China. Typical consumer fireworks include fountains, cones, sparklers, firecrackers, rockets and multi-tube products.

Illegal explosives are often unpackaged and wrapped with plain brown paper. They are unlikely to have any safety warnings or place of manufacture. Many of them are handmade in basements or illicit factories. They go by names such as M-80, Quarter Stick or Cherry Bombs. If someone approaches you to sell one of these illegal explosives, politely decline and then call your local police department.

Please take this information and remind yourself that fireworks can be extremely dangerous, and could potentially be deadly if misused. Always read instructions properly, follow all recommendations and never misuse them. When it comes to illegal fireworks, just say no thanks. Illegal fireworks can be really dangerous, if they don't hurt you they can land you in some trouble with the law. If you are selling fireworks this Boom City season or seasons to come, are illegal fireworks really worth losing your privilege to sell and make money during the Fourth of July season?

Sincerely
William Burchett & Jesus Madrigal
