They were influential individuals who dedicated much of their lives to supporting, bettering, and empowering tribal youth.

Each a Tulalip citizen, their commendable spirits are now immortalized in paint as part of a five portrait project known as the UNITY mural. The highly anticipated mural reveal took place on Saturday, April 13.

“This is a perfect day, a perfect moment,” declared Herman Williams Jr., a representative from Greg Williams’ family shortly after the murals were unveiled. “This is what we are about as Tulalip people, honoring those who had a positive effect on ourselves. Each mural is of someone who was very influential to us as young people, old people, and everything in between.”

More than 150 community members gathered at Greg Williams Court to share in the special moment as the curtains were pulled down and the vibrant portraits were put on full display. This type of gathering was exactly what the project coordinator had in mind.

“Initially, I envisioned something that would bring the community together and bring families together,” explained mural coordinator Deyamonta Diaz. “These murals tell the stories behind our buildings, who they are named after, and the legacy these people left. To see all five people together gives the families an opportunity to share memories.

“Also, for the people who don’t know them, they are going ask ‘who are these people?’ and ‘why are their pictures up?’” added Deyamonta. “I think that’s a great conversation starter for the community to keep these people’s legacies alive.”

Legacy was a concept routinely mentioned as speakers and representatives for each painted figure shared loving words and fond memories. A shared hope for future generations to carry on their family member’s legacy through resolve and action, while looking to each painting as a symbol of support when needed, was also expressed repeatedly at the podium.

Four of the five mural honorees have passed on, with Penoke Hatch being the lone exception.

“As we look at these murals, it’s important to know each one of them is still here with us. They are here in their families who tell their stories,” shared Penoke. “Each one of them made an impact in different ways. They always took care of everybody, especially the young ones. Thank you to the artists, Youth Services, and the Tribe for what they did here to honor us.”

Honoring those represented on the Tulalip Bay athletic campus with a UNITY mural was made possible in partnership with Youth Services and local Native artists, Monie Ordonia (Tulalip) and Jordan Willard (Tlingit).

“They had a vision of having portraits in mural form of all the legends that these building are named after,” said Monie. “The concept incorporates Native colors, so we used red, black, yellow, and white as the backgrounds. For Debbie, we used gray as the background and then incorporated her grandchildren’s hand prints.

“I like to feel the energy of who I’m painting, like an activation, it helps bring the person to life,” continued Monie. “Once the murals are complete and Don “Penoke” Hatch gets an up close and personal view of his portrait, while daughter Denise speaks of his long-time commitment to the youth.

I look into the eyes of the painting, then I can feel them communicating with me. Hopefully, that helps other people have the ability to do the same.”

The memories of Kenny Moses, Debra Barto, Greg Williams, Penoke and Gunny Jones are kept alive by those who knew them best. Some were beneficiaries of their admirable determination, while others were fortunate to witness their heroic exploits in action. For everyone else, the UNITY mural serves as a reminder that legends are never forgotten.

TELA students celebrate worldwide cultures

By Kalvin Valdillez

Construction paper, glue sticks, coloring crayons, yarn, glitter and beads covered ten interactive crafting tables in the Betty J. Taylor Early Learning Academy's (TELA) gym. As soon as the clock struck 10 a.m. on April 12, students and their families poured into the gym for an exciting morning spent learning about various cultures from around the world.

At the start of this school year, TELA began incorporating more of the Tulalip culture inside of their classrooms. The school put an emphasis on restoring the Lushootseed language by collaborating with the Language department, inviting them to have a strong presence in each class and speak Lushootseed directly to the kids. TELA also hosts monthly cultural days, where the students attend an interactive assembly full of traditional Tulalip songs and stories followed by a fun art project with their class. This month, the Academy decided to shake things up a bit by partnering with the Imagine Children's Museum to teach the youth about several cultures outside of Native America.

"We have Tulalip cultural events throughout the year and it focuses on the Tulalip culture," says TELA ECEAP Manager, Stephanie Pittman. "We found out the children's museum has the opportunity to bring the kids cultures from around the world, with all these different games and projects. We asked them to come out today and they set all the supplies up and our teachers are leading the activities. It's fun, the kids are learning about different parts of the world and we had a wonderful turnout."

The students learned, as well as celebrated, the culture of many countries such as Japan, France, Australia, China, Morocco, Canada and Mexico by constructing items that are significant to those cultures like uchiwa fans, chapeau hats, didgeridoos, dragon puppets, Khamsa art, dream catchers, paper flowers and animal masks.

"Today's event is to celebrate our world," expressed Brooke Hereth, Imagine Children's Museum Educator. "The kids learn about different cultures and create some cool crafts too. It gives the kids the chance not only to engage with their families and their friends outside of the typical school day, but it gives them a chance to learn about different cultures in different parts of the world, it's like bringing the world to them."

The sound of excitement filled the air for well over an hour, as the students met up with their friends and created projects side by side. Many of the crafts were wearable, so the kids often left the stations with a new flower bracelet or stylish headgear. The involvement from their family made the day much more special for the youngins as they gleefully showcased their artwork to their parents and proudly posed for photos, holding their completed projects up high before moving on to the next activity.

"We've hit every different activity station," said TELA Parent, Marci Fryberg. "We've made paper hats, we've done fans, dragons, we sat and sang some nursery rhymes. The creativity behind all these crafts are great, it's been fun. I believe that being Native American, our kids need to understand the diversity throughout this world, as far as the differences in people and their cultures, what's important to them. It's good to expose them at a very young age so they can be open and accepting of everybody they come across in life."

After filling up their mini "travel" passports, the TELA students exited the gym, leaving with a bag full of memorabilia and a mind full of knowledge about different cultures and their values. And due to the event's reception and success, TELA plans to continue their partnership with the Imagine Children's Museum and offer more of the fun interactive lessons to their students on future cultural days.

Tulalip first responders share fun and inspiration with boys and girls club kids

By Micheal Rios

Anticipation built throughout the day on Friday, April 5 as word spread Tulalip police officers and firefighters would be making a special appearance at the local Boys and Girls Club. The opportunity for kids of the Club to hang out and make memories with local heroes was expected to be a major hit for everyone involved.

“We wanted to have an event showcasing positive interactions between our kids and the police department,” explained Mark Hatch, Boys & Girls Club Director. “It’s important they understand our officers are great people who are friendly and invested in their safety. An opportunity like this also gives a chance for the kids and the community to see their firefighters and police in action and serving them in a fun way.”

It was around three o’clock in the afternoon when over fifty excited kids gathered in the Club’s gymnasium to greet their guests from the Tulalip Police and Fire departments. Hardly able to contain themselves, several rambunctious youth decided to make the most of the occasion and challenge two officers to a good old fashioned foot race. The kids had the benefit of endless energy and perhaps even an added advantage of their competitors not going all out, but the kids wouldn’t be denied. They were all smiles crossing the finish line.

As officer after officer and firefighter after firefighter showed up to the midafternoon assembly, the kids sat attentively and listened to their guests. Each first responder introduced themselves to the group followed by TPD Sergeant Santos and Chief Sutter sharing an important message to the kids.

When asked ‘who wants to be a firefighter when they grow up?’ several children raised their hands. When asked ‘who wants to be a police officer?’ even more hands went up.

“We are just like you. At one point, in all our lives, we were your age and had the same dreams to grow up and make a difference,” shared Sergeant Santos. “I knew at a young age I wanted to be a police officer. It took a lot of work, but now here I am lucky enough to have my dream job. The ultimate goal for most people is to be happy in life and to be able to work your dream job plays a big part in that.”

It should come as no surprise to learn there are many kids today who dream of one day becoming a police officer or firefighter. A 2017 Imagination Report conducted by New York Life found while kids gravitate toward the same five professions as years past – doctor, vet, athlete, police officer and teacher – a lot more of them are vying to become cops. In fact, the report showed police officer was the most popular job children surveyed hope to have when they grow up, followed closely by firefighter.

Some children dream of being firefighters because they often see it as an exciting, courageous job that also helps people. Other kids often dream of becoming police officers because like their favorite superheroes, police officers fight crime and help citizens. These dreams are shared between aspiring boys and girls alike. Just ask TPD officer Aissa Thompson, whose mere presence inspired several young ladies to think about a career in law enforcement.

“My message to little girls everywhere who dream big is no matter how hard it gets, never stop believing in yourself or your abilities and anything can be achieved,” said Officer Thompson. Her popularity soared with the kids, especially after several Club members got her autograph. “It’s so worth it to take time to interact with a few youth one-on-one. We can possibly change someone's life here today just by showing them what's possible."

Following a canine unit presentation and many conversations with the Club's kiddos, the first responders hung around to engage the youth on their terms. Games of one-on-one basketball, tag, and Frisbee were enjoyed by all.

"We really wanted to do something that would benefit our first responders and show a different side to the kids," said TPD Chief Sutter as he looked out to the gymnasium full of positive interactions with the youth taking place. "We wanted to let the young people know we are here to protect each and every one of them. Hopefully, some of these young people will grow up and become police officers for their community someday. Wouldn't that be something special?"

Yes, it certainly would be something special.

Team Outreach provides support and encouragement to Tulalip youth

By Kalvin Valdillez

The transition from adolescence into adulthood is no easy feat. The teenage years are filled with triumphs and numerous setbacks. In many Native communities, kids are exposed to much more pain growing up, witnessing their loved one's attempt to fight through adversity and find ways to cope with the years of generational trauma that is embedded in our DNA. Sometimes we find healthy outlets to work through that trauma and other times we look for ways to escape it. In addition to finding their personal identity, studying, participating in social activities and preparing for college,

Native youth face many similar challenges as the average teen, but arguably at a higher extent, such as depression, violence at school or at home, the pressure to abuse drugs as well as the loss of friends or family to suicide.

Teens often need an extra bit of encouragement to help them through their periods of struggle. Many kids look to confide in somebody outside of their families, who can listen, relate and provide a positive perspective to help them keep pushing forward. Tulalip Outreach workers, Dakota (Cody) Monger and Cassandra Jimicum, are providing exactly that for several local youth of the community.

The Family Haven program, Team Outreach, is designed to provide support to Tulalip youth, helping them accomplish their goals and get things back on track. Cody works with the young men of Tulalip between the ages of thirteen and twenty-two, while Cassandra works with the young ladies between fourteen and twenty-two. The teens learn how to set, prioritize and accomplish both short and long term goals while also receiving assistance with recovery, physical and mental health, legal issues, obtaining a driver's license, money management and resumes. The program assists high school students get re-enrolled if they dropped out of school and also helps those who wish to transfer schools within the Marysville School District.

"We will help them with everything and anything really," says Cody "It's like a role model program or a mentorship. Everything you can think of that our youth needs, we cover it like self-esteem, or if they're suicidal and too scared to talk with somebody about it. It's hard to pinpoint a specific area we work on, but we work at their pace. The biggest thing is we want to earn their trust and just be real with them, like call their bluff out or if they're doing something wrong, tell it to them like a friend would, like dude you're messing up."

"They set their own goals and we go at their pace," adds Cassandra. "I just started in February and I've already helped my girls with TANF, I awarded a few shoe vouchers, I got one of my girls into Drivers Ed, I got two girls enrolled back in school and helped a girl get into counseling. We have a referral process and when we get referrals, we go out and just talk with them. They tell us everything they want to accomplish and then we narrow it down to two goals and then we work on those goals and once those are completed, we work on two more."

Both Cody and Cassandra have seen a number of success stories from the youth who participate in their groups. They explained that they proudly watched several individuals overcome personal obstacles and achieve huge feats, rising to the challenge one issue at a time and getting things done.

“I had a young man who posted every day that he didn’t want to be here,” Cody states. “It took about six to eight months pinpointing where the issue stemmed from. We had to break everything down, just so he could be happy again. Now the only thing he posts are messages saying ‘I’m doing fantastic, I’m going to school today or I love being a stepdad.’ He went from a deep, deep depression to being happy and thankful every day. He’s holding down a job, getting his GED, he became a stepfather and recently he’s started traveling more.

“Another one of my guys got in a fight with a family member and literally barricaded himself in his room for months on end and had no communication with anybody, not even his mom. Now he’s into classical music, he’s holding B’s and A’s in school and is going to be doing a few concerts in the summer.”

The Outreach workers meet one-on-one with their teens on a weekly-basis, allowing them the chance to vent about any current difficulties they are experiencing as well as celebrate any new victories. Cody and Cassandra make the experience as smooth as possible for their clients by meeting them where they’re most comfortable, whether that’s at the Family Haven office, home, school, a coffee shop or a restaurant.

Since Cody’s program has been established for a few years, many members of his group are well-acquainted with each other and have created a strong support system within the group. Cody also holds a study day on Wednesdays as well as an end-of-the week gathering, where those who wish to participate can meet up to talk about the week or participate in a physical activity together, like weight training or a pick-up game of basketball at the Marysville YMCA. As Cassandra’s program continues to gain momentum and additional participants, she also wishes to hold group gatherings throughout the week to enhance life skills with cooking and exercising classes as well as fun art and craft activities.

Currently Cassandra is guiding six young ladies through the program and Cody is serving twelve young gentlemen on a consistent basis. They want to extend a friendly welcome out to other young adults in the area who can benefit from this program, as well as to those parents and teachers who may have someone in mind that could use a helping hand, and some encouragement to reach their full potential and beyond.

to know that there is somebody out there willing to go above and beyond for them, to help them through their darkest times,” expresses Cody. “I know sometimes it’s hard to reach out to ask for that peer support, or help in general. It’s a good feeling for them, knowing that there are people who are genuinely looking out for what’s best for them and their future.”

Nodding her head in agreement, Cassandra adds, “I feel the same way. It’s important that people know we are here to help our kids get back in school and that we are here to assist in any way we can to make sure they are successful in life.”

MISSION BEACH
WATER QUALITY
MONITORS NEEDED

Training on Tuesday, April 30, 10:00AM-1:00PM
Tulalip Administration Building, Room 263

Opportunity to participate in monitoring water quality at Mission Beach!

We welcome Tualip tribal members to be a part of this team. New volunteers must attend this training to participate.

Tualip Tribes Natural Resources Department teams up with WSU Beach Watchers to collect water samples on Mission Beach to verify that swimming conditions are acceptable for physical contact.

Sampling will take place from Memorial to Labor Day, once a week. You will complete a data form, walk along the beach to take three water samples at specific points and deliver them to the Tribal Water Quality Lab for analysis. Everyone will work with a partner and be able to select the dates they want to go out. We're asking all training attendees to sign up for at least two sampling days.
