Tulalip Tribal Council swears in new leadership

Newly elected chairman, Herman Williams, wastes no time establishing his plans

Article and photos by Andrew Gobin

The Tulalip Tribal Council swore in three members on Saturday, April 5 at the Tulalip Board Room, welcoming newly elected Les Parks and Herman Williams, Sr., and returning Councilman Glen Gobin. Parks and Williams have both served on the council in prior years, which may have contributed to their winning of two seats, and the appointment of Williams as Chair and the election of Parks as Vice Chair. Glen Gobin was elected as Treasurer.

Chairman Williams spoke directly, mapping out his plans for changing the direction of the Tulalip Tribes, urging for tradition and culture to be the foundation of our community, once more.

He said, "If we continue as we are, neglecting our culture and traditional ways, the man from Washington D.C. will come here and there will be no Tulalips. Without culture, Tulalip is gone."

Williams spoke briefly about returning to the old ways of leadership, mentioning the influence of past leaders over his life and leadership.

"All these ones here behind me," he said, motioning to the photos of all the past councilmembers, "I walked with them all in my lifetime. I may be the only one [on the council] who has had that privilege."

The Tulalip people are a big concern as well for the new Chairman. He briefly mentioned the social dysfunction of substance abuse that plagues the Tulalip people today.

"We have our people, and we have our strength. But we have to walk together, once more. We have a lot of children born into this life of ours that have been caught in this web of drugs and alcohol. I'm gonna get this community together to take care of that. You women, you are the givers of life. But I understand that some of you are bringing children into this world that are going to have a tough time. I can't allow that any longer. We will have to march down that road together if we want to heal," he said.

Les Parks, elected Vice Chair for the Tulalip Tribal Council, spoke, thanking the people for their support. He praised Chairman Williams for his leadership and experience, stating how honored he was to serve with him, and the rest of the council.

Glen Gobin, elected Treasurer, echoed Parks' sentiments, honoring Williams for his past leadership and his status as the elder councilman. Gobin, who was re-elected for a fourth consecutive term, welcomed Williams and Parks back to the council after years of absence.

Newly elected Tulalip Tribal Chairman, Herman Williams, Sr., speaks about Camano Head, ancestors, and the importance of tradition and culture in the Tulalip community.

Glen Gobin, Treasurer, accepts his seat on the Board and welcomes Williams and Parks as well.

Les Parks, Vice-Chairman, accepts his seat on the Board.

Why Is the Tribal Court Publishing These Names? Because prior to last month, there were over 300 active warrants on the warrant list which is time consuming and very costly to the Tribal Police and the Tribal Court system.

Since the Tribal Court began giving notice to folks that an active warrant list would be published, many Tribal members have come in to quash their warrant and take care of business.

Why Didn’t I Get Notice? By authority of Tulalip Tribal Resolution, 2011-504, the Court published an article in the December 2013 issue of the See-Yaht-Sub, “Tulalip Tribal Court to Publish Names on Warrant List,” and ran that article at least a dozen times to insure that adequate public notice was given. Information on how to quash a warrant was also included in the article.

In addition, notice was posted at the Tribal Court and the Administration Building to give Tribal members with warrants advance notice that the Warrant List would be published in March 2014.

Can I Still Come in to the Tribal Court and Quash My Warrant? Yes. Warrant Quash times are as follows: Tuesdays from 8:30 a.m. to 9:30 a.m., and Fridays from 10:00 a.m. to 11:00 a.m.

What Does it Cost to Quash a Warrant? For first time offenders

(sometimes second time offenders), your warrant quash will cost you nothing. If you are a repeat offender, the judge may levy a fee for you to quash your warrant, anywhere from $25 to $75 dollars. The police, prosecution, and probation are then notified that you came to the court to quash your warrant. It is advised to please keep your warrant quash paperwork on you for at least two weeks after it is quashed.

Why Do I Have a Warrant? Warrants are issued because you failed to appear at your hearing; i.e., you gave the Court your word you would attend your court hearing and broke your word by not appearing, or there was a criminal complaint filed against you, or if you have failed to comply with a court order, such as having a probation violation or a missed UA. You may be able to quash an old warrant and get a new Court hearing date if you are a Tribal member and you have a warrant for your arrest on the Tulalip Reservation.

Do Other Courts Publish Warrant Lists? Yes. Most larger court systems publish the names of people with active warrants, as well as some Tribal courts.

Do I Have Any Other Options? You can turn yourself in to the Tulalip Tribal Police Department.

Article and photos by Andrew Gobin Almost two weeks after a landslide devastated the Oso community, support for the persistent relief effort remains strong and unwavering. The Tulalip Resort Casino and country music star Chance McKinney hosted a benefit concert raising more than $16,000. “We are charging $20 for admission, 100% of which goes to the Oso relief effort. Specifically we are donating to the Cascade Valley Hospital Foundation and Union Bank,” said Shane Warbus, Food & Beverage Operations Manager for the Tulalip Resort. McKinney, who was exceedingly humble about the show, expressed his shock and sympathies for the Oso community.

“Who am I to throw a benefit for people in need? That is a scary notion. And what if no one shows up? But it’s the cause. And $20 admission, that’s what national headliners charge, I’m not that guy. This is all for the cause,” he said.

Ron Stubbs, a comic and hypnotist who opened the show, said, “You people that came and paid $20, donating your time and money for those victims in Oso, you guys rock.”

The show started with Stubbs at 8:00 p.m., with McKinney going on at 9:30 p.m., and people continued to line up to get in until midnight, still paying for admission.

McKinney said, “We received donations from New York, Tennessee, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Arizona, and many other states. Essentially, people bought tickets to a show they will never see. All for the cause.”

The show came together quickly after McKinney approached Tulalip with the idea for a benefit, motivated by his close connection with the area.

“Watching the news of Oso versus living here so close to it every day, it’s different,” said McKinney. “My first CD was cut in Darrington, for six months I drove through that area. I know where those houses were. But I can’t imagine living so close to this, where your brother’s girlfriend had a baby that was killed there, or where your mother and father died,” he said. He still lives in the area part time.

Aside from a few in-house costs, there was no money spent on the event. Advertising and other promotional information was donated for the event.

“We didn’t want one dollar of this event to be lost to expenses. Everything was handled pro bono by the Tulalip Resort. Everything came together, and we were able to pull this off in a week,” McKinney said.

“I am proud to announce that this event in the Cabaret was well attended and well executed. We had a goal to get $8 - $10K, through the efforts of the team, we had hit that by 11:00 p.m.,” Warbus added, noting that it truly was the audience that was driving the charitable efforts. “Guests were throwing money on stage, Chance was getting money while he played. He would announce where the guest was from while he was accepting the donation, the crowd loved it. After the event was over there was still more money coming in, guests were still giving on the way out.”

Top: McKinney started a ‘dollar dance’ with people dumping money into buckets as they were passed around. Below: Hypnotists Ron Stubbs’ volunteer, Adam. He thought the most beautiful woman he ever saw was under a wig, and he was about to show her his moves.

said Travis Hots, Fire Chief for the Snohomish County Fire District 21, to attendees at the Tulalip Jam Session Oso Fundraiser on Friday, April 4, that raised over $3,400 for the victims and rescue crews of the Oso Mudslide.

“At first we just thought it was just another slide like the one that occurred in Mukilteo on Camano Island. We didn’t fully understand the magnitude of the disaster at first,” Hots went onto say.

On March 22, 2014, a portion of an unstable hill collapsed, sending mud and debris across the North Fork of the Stillaguamish River, destroying the Steelhead Haven neighborhood and covering an area of 1 square mile including a section of Highway 530, cutting off the town of Darrington. As a result of the mudslide, 33 people were confirmed dead with 12 missing or unaccounted for, as of April 7. The mudslide is considered the deadliest single landslide event in U.S. history.

Hundreds of medical aid, search-and-rescue responders and volunteers sprang into action to help with rescue efforts. This included responders from the Tulalip community, such as a Tulalip tribal member spouse with the Snohomish County Swift Water Rescue, and responders from Tulalip Bay Fire Station.

To help ease the burden of rescue relief expenses, the Tulalip community organized the jam session to raise money.

Tribal jam sessions are gatherings born out of the Coast Salish Canoe Journeys, where coastal tribes come together to share songs with one another. A charity jam session, like the one held to raise money for the victims and rescue workers of the Oso mudslide, incorporates traditional potlatching values, which include giving to those in need, praying together and sharing as a community.

The event, attended by nearly 200 people, including surrounding Coast Salish tribes, raised $3,486 to be donated to four organizations. The Snohomish County Swift Water Rescue will receive $870. Another $870 will be donated to Snohomish

News

County Fire District 22, one of the stations that Fire Chief Travis Hots is stationed at to lead rescue efforts. Cascade Valley Hospital Victims Fund will receive $870 and $870 will be donated to animal rescue and shelters.

“The Oso mudslide is a tragedy that is not only close to our home, but we had tribal members grow up in the area, some still have homes close to the site of the mudslide,” said Natosha Gobin, event creator and organizer. Since it is a custom of our people to stand up for our warriors and protect them for their work, we invited Travis to attend our fundraiser, so we could wrap him with a Pendleton for protection and thank him for his work.”

The event, comprised of 10 core organizers and 25 volunteers, raised donations through concession stands selling food, water, and raffle tickets. Local Tulalip artists Jonny Dill and Sam Davis donated original art, along with Essential Earth Organic Salon and Tulalip Resort Casino, who donated product packages for the raffle.

“We decided to go with a suggested donation at the door, concession stand, bake sale and raffle. Since this event was a community effort, we asked for donations of paper goods for the food and drinks. Those who stepped up to cook, donated items to cook spaghetti, hamburger soup, Frybread and a variety of desserts. There was a sense of unity, love and healing in the building that night. I felt truly blessed to have so many great team members who helped make an idea turn into a successful event for our neighbors in the Oso area,” said Gobin.

“It was no surprise to see that the Tulalip Tribes were the first entities to make a large contribution and for that I am very grateful,” said Hots before the jam session. “I want to express that gratitude on behalf of the fire fighters because those dollars are going to good use, thank you. I would also like to thank each of you for inviting myself, my wife and kids, and for accepting us into your community tonight, it is truly an honor and I say thank you.”

Youth from front page

A ribbon cutting ceremony held on Monday, April 7, coincided with the first day of spring break for Tulalip youth, and marks the official opening of the center that was designed with this age group in mind.

Amenities in the center include a new basketball court, game room, work out room, and large commons area for studying or visiting.

For questions about the Don Hatch Youth Center, please contact Tulalip Youth Services at 360-716-4909.

The ribbon was cut on April 7, 2014, by Tulalip Tribes General Manager Sheryl Fryberg and former Tulalip Board member Don Hatch Jr., which the center is named after.

The Don Hatch Youth Center ribbon cutting ceremony included a packed day of fun activities for Tulalip youth, including a visit from the Bubble Man, Garry Golightly, and delicious cotton candy.

The new Don Hatch Youth Center's gym still displays on the walls, cutouts of the former basketball court flooring that the new center's basketball court replaced.

Tulalip family hosts Italian foreign exchange student

Bernard and Sandra Duplessis and their family have been hosting exchange students for the past two years. It's an experience that they would like to see grow on the reservation. The opportunity to see the world and experience another culture, or host a student and share your culture with them, both are ways to open yourself up to the world and appreciate your own culture.

Meet Tommaso Vaccari, a 17 year old Italian exchange student from Genoa, currently attending Getchell High School. He is very outgoing and independent.

"I arrived in August of last year, and will be here for about ten months," he said.

He lives with Bernard and Sandra Duplessis, their son, Bernard Jr., their daughter, Dallas, and Bernard's mother, Joan. When Tommaso arrived, he spoke very little English. After learning from his host family, and from school, he speaks so well you wouldn't know he is new to it. The way he speaks is not what you would expect either. Idioms are more pronounced, his tone changes as he uses phrases that he is more familiar with. Although you may not realize it about yourself, you probably do these same things. You really notice with Tommaso, though, as the colloquialisms of pop culture have manifested in his English, picking up slang from his peers.

The largest culture shock for Tommaso is reservation life.

"I had no idea what a reservation was," he said, "but my father has always been intrigued by the Indians. He rides horses with a man in Genoa, who lived with Indians for some time. They go out riding together and my father learns about Indians that way. This is totally different. Here is so much different than in town.

"In September I was fishing with my host brother, and there were some [Indian] people that did not like that. They said that if you weren't Indian you couldn't fish. And then there were other people [non Indians] that were mad about that. Then the police came and told everyone to leave. And they told me that I could not be there. But I was with my host brother, and I had to explain to the police."

The Duplessis family will be sad to see him go in June, when the exchange program ends.

"We consider him part of the family. He plays with our son, Bernard, and really has become a part of our lives. We talk to his family as well. They sent us a box of gifts. On Tommaso's mother's birthday, we arranged to send her flowers. She was thrilled. We feel like we have a family around the world in Italy too," said Sandra.

She continued to talk about her son Bernard Jr., and how Tommaso helps him with his medical condition. Bernard is a hemophiliac and requires daily injections.

Tommaso said, "Coming here, living with these people, and helping my host brother Bernard, I want to become a doctor. I had always considered it, but coming here, I know it is what I want."

Tommaso comes from a family of innovators and entrepreneurs. For him, his interests have always been on other fields.

Bernard and Sandra really would like to see programs like this grow. They hope that Tulalip students will be inspired to travel to other countries for schooling, to experience some of the rich cultures of the world, and hopefully to find the richness in our own culture.

If you see Tommaso out in the community, be sure to stop and get to know him a bit.

Congratulations to our new Board of Directors

There were so many candidates this year it was overwhelming to say the least. It was time for a change and with all that has happened this past year dealing with our money and rumors even from the Board itself telling us at different meetings about the shortfall and never providing us tribal members any definite figures on the shortfall nor providing any definite answers on how or why this got so mixed up. The General Council needs to be receiving more information from the Board on the various projects that involve our economy especially when it involves large amounts of money that definitely effects the tribal members..

Hopefully this will improve with the turnover as I can't remember when we received the last Board minutes. They do provide staff with the Boards monthly Directives but these haven't been going out to the general membership. We should be the first ones receiving this information. The Directives don't go into detail it merely gives a small picture on actions the Board takes.

So I wish the Board good luck and please keep us tribal members advised in a timely manner on what is happening.

For my daughters, Keely and Hayleigh

God made man in his own image,
And you were made in mine
That's why you look just like me,
More and more with time.
You each came into this world
Much needed rays of light,
I never knew I needed you
As much as you needed me.
My heart is in your hands
I never want set free
God so loved his only son
And made a very hard decision –
To sacrifice his life for us.
So after death we go on living
I guess I must be selfish
I'd never willingly comply
To give you up for anything
I would rather die
Even though we're separated
Time will heal all wounds
That cant keep me here forever
Mommy will be home soon!
