SALMON CEREMONY JUNE 15 11AM TULALIP LONGHOUSE

Honoring the Fallen

By Calvin Valdillez

The American flag flew high in the distance, all fifty stars and thirteen stripes waving in the wind as Tulalip Board of Director and Vietnam Army Veteran, Mel Sheldon, commenced the Tribe's yearly Memorial Day observation ceremonies. At the Priest Point and Mission Beach cemeteries, the community honored the fallen

Trained in the trades: Future construction workers intend to build a better tomorrow

By Micheal Rios

Educators, parents and others often place strong emphasis on college preparation and earning an Associate's or Bachelor's degree by traditional means. But that lengthy and expensive route often means accruing a ton of debt just to enter a highly competitive job market. College degrees may be the preferred goal for many, however there are a growing number of students who see a more hands-on future for themselves. For these individuals unafraid of getting their hands dirty and learning the true meaning behind a hard day's work, there soldiers who sacrificed their lives while defending our nation's freedom. Many veterans and families visited the graves of their loved ones, fondly reminiscing, sharing words, delivering flowers and cleaning up headstones.

"I was thinking about the type of healing needed when one comes home from battle," Mel admitted to the crowd. "A lot of times healing isn't available, but I know that in Indian communities, warriors are honored. Right here at home, throughout the years, what we did as Indian people for our veterans, welcoming them home, taking time out to thank and honor our veterans, that was the best medicine possible, you couldn't find anything better. The healing begins with what you do for your warriors, today is an example of that. We're coming together to remember so we don't forget."

As the community paid their respects to the soldiers who were lost at combat, they also honored and thanked the Tulalip Gold Star Mothers, the Tulalip veterans and those who are currently on active duty for their service. Many veterans shared their experience with the people, recounting stories of friendships made within their platoon as well as the tragedies of warfare. Among the veteran speakers were Cyrus Williams, Hank Williams, John McCoy, William McLean III and Tulalip Chairwoman, Teri Gobin. They spoke of admiration for those who served and thanked the military families in attendance for their sacrifice.

"This is a weekend where we get our cemeteries ready so we can honor and remember all of those who paid the ultimate sacrifice and all of those who served for this country to keep us free," stated Teri. "I raise my hands to each and every one of you who served and all of you who are here to remember your people."

Senator McCoy expressed, “It’s great to see you all here this morning to honor our fallen veterans and remember them, but we also have to recognize the families and what they went through while the member was away. I want to recognize my wife, we were in the Philippines together, she was a civilian but she worked in the Clarks Airbase Hospital. I always say she carried more scars away from that experience than I did.”

The Tulalip Honor Guard stood at attention, saluting their fallen comrades during Roll Call as Marine Veteran, Cyrus Hatch, spoke the name of every Native veteran who’s buried at the Priest Point and Mission Beach cemeteries, ensuring their memories live on within the Tulalip community. Both memorial services ended with a 21-gun salute, giving one last shout out, in the highest of honors, to the heroes who never returned home

“Today really is about the veterans who sacrificed their lives so we can enjoy the freedoms that we have at home,” explained William

McLean III, Tulalip Veterans Department Coordinator. “I have a tremendous amount of respect for those veterans because I couldn’t imagine what it would be like for the families. I want to thank all of the families of the veterans. I also want to thank the Honor Guard for answering my call every time we have an event. And I want to give a special thanks to the gentlemen who did the cemetery clean up; Michael Martin, Tony Gobin, Tamur Zahir Jr., John Burke and Art Contraro.

They’ve been working all month long, making sure our cemeteries look the best they can for Memorial Day. You know, every generation had a different type of war throughout the ages and it’s not an experience you can really explain. But the one thing we can do is come together, as a people, and support each other, hold each other up and that’s exactly what happened here today and I appreciate every one for it.”

are abundant opportunities available within the construction industry.

Whether it be laborer, carpenter, ironworker or heavy equipment operator, there are countless openings for work and advancement within construction trades, especially for sought after minorities, like Native Americans and women. A major access point for entry into the construction trades for tribal citizens and their families continues to be Tulalip’s own TERO Vocational Training Center (TVTC).

“Not everybody wants to be a doctor or lawyer. Not everybody wants a desk job. I’m a lifetime fisherman that started a construction company when it became apparent we could no longer sustain ourselves simply by living off the land,” said Tulalip Vice-Chairman Glen Gobin. “Some want to be outside working with their hands. That’s what brings people to our training program, it gives them an opportunity to get exposure to all the different trades, learn how to function on a job site and how to get work. Graduates of TVTC enter a section of the workforce that is in high demand.”

In fact, look around the greater Seattle area and you’ll see more cranes than you can count. Along the I-5 corridor, from Tacoma to Everett, construction projects are booming and many on-site jobs continue to go unfilled. While other career pathways may be oversaturated and hard to come by, the construction trades are thriving. According to the U.S. Department of Labor, open construction positions are expected to increase by 700,000+ jobs nationally through 2026, a faster growth than any other occupation.

Bright horizons and a variety of prospects gave all the more reason to celebrate the TVTC spring cohort’s immense achievement. On Thursday, May 23, twenty-three students were honored with a graduation banquet for their commitment to building a better future. Nearly 150 guests attended, including trade union representatives, several construction employers, and many cheerful family members.

“We are such big and enthusiastic supporters of this program

Sound Transit CEO Peter Rogoff was honored with a blanket and Raven feather carving for his long-standing partnership with the TERO Vocational Training Center.

Former TERO Coordinator Lynne Bansemer recognized for her longtime dedication to TERO and TVTC. Charwoman Teri Gobin told her, "It's been an awesome journey together. Lynne has been a mother figure to every one of our students. Without her passion we wouldn't have the program that we do now."

for a number of reasons," explained Sound Transit CEO and guest speaker Peter Rogoff. "Right now, we are building the largest transit expansion program in the United States. We'll be spending in excess of $60 Billion over the next 25 years. There are huge opportunities for folks coming out of trades programs, like TVTC, to begin careers with local contractors. There will be well-paying jobs for graduates of this program for a very long time."

As far as we know, the TVTC program is the first and only state and nationally recognized Native American pre-apprenticeship program in the country. The program is accredited through South Seattle Community College and Renton Technical College, while all the in-class, hands-on curriculum has been formally approved by the Washington State Apprenticeship and Training Council.

The sixteen-week program provides 501-hours of hands-on instruction, strength building exercises, and construction skills that can last a lifetime. In addition, students are trained and awarded certifications in flagging, first aid/CPR, industrial fork lift and scissor lift, 40-hour HAZWOPER, and OSHA 10-hour safety.

Of this latest graduating cohort, ten students are Tulalip tribal members, five are Makah, two are Quinault and the remaining six are other Native. Homegrown citizen Bradley Fryberg opted to take the class to jumpstart an all-new career path as an electrician, not just for himself but for all those who come after as well.

"The TVTC program couldn't have helped more to jump start my career by giving me the necessary tools, showing me how to be the best employee/apprentice I can be, and, most importantly, by assisting me gain direct entry into the electricians union," reflected Bradley. His instructors noted he was the first in his class to gain employment and he's the first TVTC graduate to ever gain direct entry as an electrical apprentice. "Currently I'm working for Sundancer Electric at the new Q parking garage. I'm truly loving what I do for a career."

Along with gaining a wide-range of new employment opportunities via the trades, seven diligent students took advantage of the educational aspect and earned their high school diploma.

Two hardworking Tulalip ladies were among the graduates, Ariana Hernandez and Misty Fryberg. Both wanted to acquire a new skillset while creating a pathway to a better and brighter future.

"When I first signed up for the class it was because I heard you could learn a lot of skills and earn your high school diploma at the same time," shared 20-year-old Ariana. With credits earned during the sixteen-week program, she earned her H.S. diploma and has already gained employment as a flagger. "Furthering my education has always been important to me. It was a great opportunity to better my math skills and learn basic carpentry work. I can think quicker and gained a lot of skills to use in my everyday life."

Some graduates journeyed much further than others in order to be in the much heralded construction trades program, like Leland Allen (Nez Perce). Leland is a single father of three whose home resides on the Nez Perce Reservation in Idaho. He relocated all the way from Idaho in the hopes of building a better tomorrow for his family.

"My auntie Judy Allen completed this class a while back, her son just graduated last year, too, and they both spoke fondly of their experience. So I decided to apply and, after getting accepted, came over," Leland said. "Over the last sixteen weeks I've added more skills to my resume and became more valuable in the construction field. My immediate plans are to go back home where there is a big highway project and opportunities for me to do carpentry and iron work.”

With hundreds of skilled-trade workers retiring every day across the state, the construction industry is in need of the next generation workforce to help build an ever-growing Snohomish County and surrounding communities. In the Seattle-Bellevue-Everett area alone, construction employment increased by 6,400 jobs between March 2018 and March 2019, according to the Associated General Contractors of America. These are well-paying jobs that are available to people straight out of high school. It takes some grit for sure, but for those folks with a strong work ethic and can-do attitude, they can find themselves running a construction company of their own someday.

“When our student graduates go out into the world of construction, they can compete on equal footing with anybody,” declared instructor Mark Newland during the graduation ceremony. “We’re gaining traction with union companies and construction employers all over the region. I just can’t say enough about this class. From day one, they were engaged, helping each other out, and understood what they had to gain by putting their nose to the grindstone.

“This class set a new record,” continued Mark. “We have thirteen people who are either working currently or going to work in the next 5-10 days to good, family-wage paying outfits. Amazing stuff! They’ve given me so much as their instructor and I wish them all the best.”

How is the job market impacting you?

Submitted by Jeanne Steffener, Higher ED

Did your job just disappear without any notice? Or did you just discover that your career path has been cut short? It does happen! There is a common thread here: education, degrees and certifications that many jobs require now.

All of a sudden some of the secrets of choosing a satisfying career in high demand becomes extremely important, as well as the ability to have a more active role in planning and directing your career goals. By observing market trends, you will have a better idea of recognizing the big changes ahead of time. Then go ahead and gain those additional requirements, such as degrees or certificates.

Trend spotting is a tool that can help to you understand the major directions of the job market and will help you make better career decisions for yourself. Like waves in the ocean, some trends are big and some are small, some last a short time while others seem to go on indefinitely. These trends affect everything that they come in contact with. So if you are unprepared, you could be swept off your feet and left floundering in the job market. We all know what happened with the great Recession of 2008 - 09, which severely affected real estate and the global financial markets. Millions of people lost their homes, jobs and savings. It was a real blow and hurt many people both financially as well as emotionally. In fact, we are still feeling the effects from this unfortunate trend.

Some trends start out small and are hardly noticeable. They can also build up to a high point and become a hot topic on the evening news. However, the important thing is to notice the trends at the beginning stages, so you can take action by adjusting and changing your life to accommodate these sudden shifts.

A shifting economic landscape is driving major changes in the American workplace. Employment opportunities are requiring higher-level social and analytical skills while physical or manual skills are less important. Top underlying factors contributing to the change in the workplace are globalization, outsourcing of jobs and change in technology. You can observe the shift in job demand by looking at these websites:

US Department of Labor: Bureau of Labor Statistics <https://www.bls.gov/opub/mlr/2019/article/employment-growth-accelerates-in-2018.htm>

Washington state and counties: Occupational employment and wage estimates for 2018

<https://esd.wa.gov/labormarketinfo/occupation>

In a recent Pew Research Center survey, respondents indicated that the most important skills for doing their job were interpersonal skills, critical thinking and good communication and writing skills. As you see, there is a need to gain additional skills to remain competitive in the job market. Community and technical colleges have many of the courses and programs that can help you redirect your path to a "new" in demand career.

If the job market is negatively affecting you, come talk to the Higher ED staff. We can be reached at 360-716-4888 or email us at highered@tulaliptribes-nsn.gov.

Confused about health care insurance? Alternative Resources can help

Judy Gregerson, Media & Marketing

You might not notice them when you enter the Karen I. Fryberg Health Clinic, but across from check-in is the small, two-desk office of Alternative Resources. The department is staffed by licensed insurance brokers who work very hard to make health insurance less burdensome for Tulalip tribal members. They are skilled problem-solvers who can sign you up for insurance, help you renew the following year, and are available to all tribal members whenever the clinic is open to answer your questions. “You can call, email, or walk in,” said Xoria Rordame, a member of the Alternative Resources team. “We’re here and we try to keep it as simple as possible.”

Alternative Resources can also help with insurance problems -- including something as simple as not knowing your insurance plan number or not having a card. If you need to know if you can use your plan off the reservation, or if you received a cancellation notice, they’re the people to talk to. When you get an ER or hospital bill and aren’t sure who pays, call Alternative Resources. Whatever your problem, big or small, they’re always there to find your answers.

Because every insurance plan is different, Alternative Resources would like to help you navigate the details of yours. First and foremost, you should check in with them every two to three months and update income and other information so they can update your insurance provider. Some plans update your income information that often.

If you signed up for Medicaid, there are requirements specific to that plan and you may not know what they are. The same with Qualified Health Plans (QHP) plans from healthplanfinder.com. If you’ve opted-out of insurance and are receiving assistance from Contract Health Services (CHS), that also has its own requirements and you must meet those in order to get bills paid.

The plan you have may be different from your friend or neighbor’s so it’s not good to rely on what anyone else tells you. Call Alternative Resources whenever you are unclear about anything to do with your health insurance and always make sure all your latest information, including changes in income, is updated.

There are some misconceptions among tribal members about health insurance plans and Alternative Resources would like to make you aware of a few of those. First, what was once called Medicaid is now called Apple Health. They are one and the same. Second, many people believe that once you sign up for health care insurance you’re set for life, but that’s not true. You need to renew your plan every year (and it’s not always on the calendar year) and that’s easily done at Alternative Resources. Third, Tulalip Contract Health Services (CHS) is not insurance, and if you need assistance through CHS, there are policies you must follow in order to receive it.

You’re not required to get insurance and can receive CHS after going through the opt-out process, but you do have to go through the process with the staff at Alternative Resources. And last, it’s possible that not everything will be covered by your health insurance so it’s important to check with Alternative Resources to find out just what is covered.

Alternative Resources’ services are unique to the Karen I. Fryberg Health Clinic and not available in other health care facilities. The department was designed for tribal members so that signing up and maintaining health insurance would not be burdensome and neither would maintaining it. Alternative Resources enjoys working with you and encourages you to avail yourself of their services. “We’re right in the lobby by the eyeglasses,” said Xoria Rordame. “Come see a licensed insurance broker and get answers to your questions”.

You can call 360-716-5721. Or email Xoria Rordame at xrordame@tulaliptribes-nsn.gov. You can also just stop by when you’re in the health clinic and ask questions. The expert staff at Alternative Resources is happy to help in any way they can. Make sure you check in with them quarterly to update income or other information that could affect your insurance coverage.

Obituaries

Delores Stamaris

On Friday, May 3, 2019, Delores Stamaris, Tribal Elder, loving Wife and Mother of 5 children, 15 grandchildren, and 5 great grandchildren, passed away at the age of 88.

Delores was born on July 19, 1930, to Martin (Lummi) and Mary (Phillips) Cepa (Tulalip.) She grew up in Stanwood, where she attended Catholic School and was often found working with her family to make ends meet through The Depression. There were times, she would ride the bus to Westport, to meet her Dad (Martin Cepa,) where his fishing boat, The Prospector, would come in for a visit. On July 14, 1967, she married Daniel J. Stamaris. They raised their 4 sons, Daniel, James, Donald & Craig, and one daughter, Sunny.

Delores was known for her Mother's heart, so full of love and understanding. She had a passion for birds, nature, the ocean, fishing, traveling, clam digging, crabbing, and spending time with her family. As a Grandmother, she was known for her listening heart/ear, infectious smile, laughter, and her tremendous love for her grandchildren.

Following is a list of what many family members said that Delores had taught them and left with them about life:

“Be humble, Nourish your imagination, Don't lick all the glue off the envelopes, If you help someone, you earned and made a friend,

Believe in yourself and don't give up. Don't overdue it.”

She taught many of us about God. Even though some of us spent years walking in the wilderness, the seed was planted because of her. In many ways, she secured our faith in God Almighty.

She showed her grandchildren how to be patient with people, and to truly listen instead of waiting for a chance to speak. She always showed true interest and was not ready with a retort, or a lesson itself. Her love for entertaining others and all the amazing cool stuff she'd make to eat; i.e. fancy cutout watermelon bowl and the tower of laced cookies and desserts. She loved anyone, even if they were not kin, she accepted everyone. She showed how to find humor in everything and to enjoy the beauty in life even if it was a loaf of bread. She always made you feel special and the more she said good things the more you wanted to do good. She instilled that there are really fine precious things to collect/treasure. She always smiled, and she took good care of herself.

Delores was preceded in death by her father, Martin and her mother, Mary. She is survived by her husband, Daniel, her five children, Daniel, James, Donald, Craig, Sunny and several Grandchildren, Great Grandchildren, Nieces and Nephews.
