Lushootseed returns to Marysville Pilchuck High School

By Micheal Rios

After nearly a two decade hiatus, the Lushootseed language has finally returned to the classroom as an official program taught at Marysville Pilchuck High School for the 2019-2020 school year.

The tireless dedication of long-time Indigenous education employees and Native student supporters Matt Remle and Ricky Belmont, who made it their mission long ago to bring the Coast Salish language to the high school, has brought a swift sense of excitement to the MP campus.

“For years my co-worker Ricky Belmont and I worked to find ways to bring Native language learning opportunities to Marysville Pilchuck. Last year, the stars finally aligned when we reached out to our administration about developing a Lushootseed class on campus and they agreed,” explained Matt Remle, lead Indigenous education liaison. “When it came time to register for classes this year, Ricky and I reached out to our current students and incoming freshman and told them they better sign up after all that hustling.

“Because demand was high we now have the amazing Natosha Gobin teaching two classes on campus,” he continued. “Students are already being [heavily] influenced. Yesterday, I was speaking to a senior about her post high school plans and she said she wanted to be a Lushootseed teacher!”

A Tulalip tribal member, Natosha has spent the last 19-years learning, teaching, and helping to revitalize the traditional language of her ancestors. She has come full circle after graduating as an MP high school student 20 years ago to now reentering the MP halls as a certified teacher and Lushootseed instructor.

“Toby Langen and Tony Hatch taught Lushootseed classes at MP in the early 2000’s, which were the classes that I sat in on along with Eliza Davis when we first started in the language department,” recalled Natosha. “It is exciting to be back on the campus as the lead teacher. I hope that I can keep the students engaged and speaking, giving them tools to use the language daily both in and out of the classroom.

“The work that Michelle Myles has done the past two years at Heritage has sparked the interest for high school youth to start learning and speaking our language,” she continued. “We have high hopes that the youth taking these classes will be able to see themselves as the next group of teachers to keep the work moving forward.”

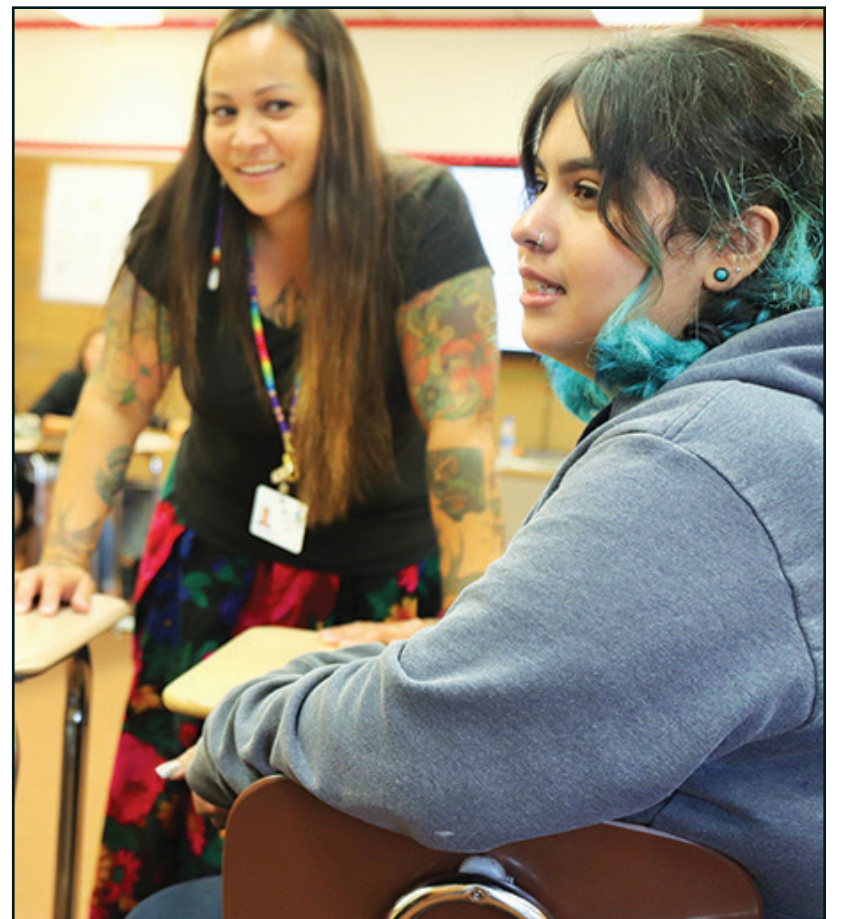

The Lushootseed course was offered to all interested students from all grade levels and quickly filled up. It comes as no surprise that the majority of her students are Tulalip tribal members who jumped at the opportunity to learn their traditional language and history from an actual Tulalip culture bearer.

my favorite classes,” shared 10th grader Shylah Zackuse (Tulalip). “After finding out Lushootseed would be offered, I planned my daily schedule perfectly in order to take it. Being taught by a tribal member, there’s a real connection because Natosha is family.”

Currently offered during 2nd and 3rd period only, 34 out of the 52 enrolled students are either Tulalip tribal members or have lived in the Tulalip community their whole lives. The remainder of the students are a mixture of other Native and non-Native students who are eager to learn about the traditional lifeways of their neighboring Tulalip people.

“I don’t know a lot about my Native culture, so taking Lushootseed is a new opportunity to learn about my background,” explained 9th grader Jesse Lamoureaux (Tsimshian from Metlakatla, Alaska). “This class teaches me about my past. What we are learning is thanks to our ancestors from way back who documented their teachings on audio tapes. My favorite phrase so far has to be ha?ɬ dadaʔu (Lushootseed for ‘good morning’) because we can say it every day.”

The Lushootseed coursework will focus on relevant conversation lessons that can be used throughout the day. These include talking about daily routines, weather, describing feelings and states of mind, as well as many more topics to keep students engaged.

The course will also feature a great many references to Tulalip ancestors and elders who laid the foundation for where the Tribes are today, such as Harriet Shelton Dover, Martha Lamont and Lizzie Krise to name but a few. And best of all the MP students won’t be reading about these iconic individuals from colonial textbooks either, instead they will be hearing their powerful words spoken from a combination of archived video and audio resources.

“Some of my greatest inspirations are the speakers who had the foresight to document and record our language, enabling us to speak and teach it today,” said Natosha. “We want to ensure our community is aware of the ancestors who played key roles in preserving the language. Through passing on their stories, some of our youth are able to recognize their connection to the speakers and deepen their desire to participate.”

With both Lushootseed classes at full capacity and a waiting list with students hoping to transfer in if the opportunity arises, Marysville Pilchuck is already looking to build on the early successes of having more culturally relevant classes available for their diverse student population.

“It’s so wonderful to be able to offer Lushootseed to our students,” explained Principal Christine Bromley. “We have Native students, non-Native students and students with disabilities all taking Lushootseed. From all perspectives of this, it’s a great opportunity to build relationships.

“Partnering with the Tulalip Tribes to bring Lushootseed here to the high school is a critical piece to build upon the relationship between the school district and the Tribes,” she added. “I can’t wait to see us grow Lushootseed into a level 2 and 3 program to get more and more students involved.”

Future plans also include offering a Native art class, such as an introduction to carving taught by a tribal member. The class space is currently available and only requires a willing artist to teach it. Until then, Natosha and her collection of Indigenous wisdom intend to teach and inspire the culturally oriented young minds of Marysville Pilchuck High School.

BACK TO SCHOOL

QUIL CEDA TULALIP
ELEMENTARY

By Kalvin Valdillez

The first morning bell rang at 9:05 a.m. on September 4, at Quil Ceda Tulalip Elementary (QCT), officially marking the end of summer for local youth and the start of a new school year. With new, fashionable clothes as well as backpacks gifted by Tulalip Youth Services, the students made their way to the school’s gymnasium for the first morning assembly of the year, where the entire school takes part in the Tulalip tradition of song and dance to begin each day. To show the students support, many Tulalip Youth Services staff attended the assembly holding ‘welcome back to school’ signs and joining in on the morning jam.

Tulalip Board of Director, Glen Gobin, also made an appearance, encouraging the students to follow their dreams and focus hard at school.

“We’re really excited for a new year,” exclaimed QCT Cultural Specialist, Chelsea Craig. “We’re so happy to have the kids back and we’re working hard to create one big family at our school and have a great start for our kids and do the best we can for them. We have a lot of teachers who are committed to teaching Native curriculum, the Since Time Immemorial curriculum, and having culturally relevant materials in the classroom. We’re ready for a fresh new start!”

Tulalip Heritage high schoolers also kicked off a new school year on the morning after Labor Day weekend. They met up with old friends and introduced themselves to new students, recapping their summers and planning out their 2019-2020 year of academics and sports. This year, Heritage athletes get to enjoy a newly remodeled home court as Tribal member, Michelle Myles, designed a stunning visual of the Francy J. Sheldon gymnasium floor, featuring Salish art patterns and Lushootseed words.

“This is the Tulalip’s next tribal council, they’re going to be fighting for their treaty rights, so we need to prepare them,” said Kelly Miller, Heritage High School Planning Principal. “I want the students to develop a sense of agency, identity and pride as to what it means to be a student at Heritage. I want this to be a place where they're able to celebrate who they are, to speak their own truth and be respectful of each other, honoring their voice and their gifts, allowing them to grow with each other. We want to make sure we're teaching them to have that forward thinking and make connections so they can be activists and continue fighting the fight that's been happening for so long."

Although their older friends, siblings and relatives started nearly a week before them, the students of the Betty J. Taylor Early Learning Academy (TELA) returned to school this year on September 9. Eager to begin their learning journey, the kids spent their first morning getting well-acquainted with their teachers and classmates by reading, drawing, playing outdoors and crafting various items out of LEGOs, beads and construction paper. Many of the future leaders proudly posed for photos, kicking off the new academic year with the brightest smiles.

"We are so excited to have the kids back, we missed them a lot." TELA Director, Sheryl Fryberg. "We are going to be working on our Lushootseed language this year and incorporating that more into their day in the classroom, as well as more of the cultural aspect of our community. We want to thank our maintenance staff, our office staff and all of the teachers and assistants for the great work preparing our classrooms and building for the kids to come back. The teachers are excited; it's going to be a great year for all of our kids."

Ever wondered what to do when wildfire smoke settles around Tulalip? Or when winter time wood stove smoke hangs around? These cards can help you plan your daily routines during these times. Visit Tulalipair-nsn.gov for more information.

HOW TO PREPARE FOR A WILDFIRE SMOKE EPISODE

4 Steps to Wildfire Smoke Safety

TIPS FOR USE WITH THE AIR QUALITY INDEX

- 1 Get out of the smoke
Spend as much time in filtered indoor environment.
- 2 Slow down
The more active you are the more you breathe and the more smoke you inhale.
- 3 Use a mask
Healthy adults can use an N-95 mask with respirator if active outdoors. Those with lung and heart disease consult doctor on proper usage.
- 4 Filter your air
Create a "clean room" with filters and fans.

THE AIR QUALITY INDEX (AQI)

- Use this scale to plan your days and protect your health during wildfire season.
- Uses colors to let you know when air quality changes. Green means healthy air and red means unhealthy.
- Those with asthma, COPD or heart conditions may find this information particularly useful.

COLOR	ACTION	AQI RANGE
	• Safe for everyone to work and be active outdoors	0-50
	• Okay for almost everyone. • Those with lung or heart conditions should use caution outdoors.	51-100
	• Unhealthy for those with by heart or lung conditions. • Elders and young children may also feel impacts to breathing. Everyone- Limit outdoor time.	101-150
	• Unhealthy for those with heart or lung conditions. • Elders and young children may also have trouble breathing. Everyone- Limit outdoor time.	151-200
	• Everyone may feel impacts. • Seek a clean air shelter with air filtration. • Use an N-95 mask if you go outdoors.	201-300
