Tribal Council swears-in new leadership after historic voter turnout

By Micheal Rios

Back in March 2020, pandemic precautions prevented Tulalip from holding its annual General Council. The Board of Directors election was held though, albeit two months later in May, amongst reservation-wide stay home orders and a lot of self-quarantining. The unique set of circumstances gave many progressive minded citizens plenty to think about in terms of the Tribe's future direction and immediate needs of the people. As a result, the convenience of being able to cast an absentee ballot from the safety of home led to an unprecedented rate of voter engagement and ballots cast for the 2020 Board of Directors election.

Well, history repeated itself in the best kind of way last month as the 2021 Board of Directors election resulted in another historic

Veterans Committee Vacancy

The Board of Directors is accepting Letters of Interest for both a Veteran – Tulalip Tribal Member and a Non-Veteran - Tulalip Tribal Member to fill vacancies on the Tulalip Veterans Committee.

The purpose of the committee is to ensure Veterans receive acknowledgement, care and services for their honorable military service. This committee shall work to promote and guide the goals of the Veteran's Department, to be the spokesmen for "Tulalip Active Service Members, Tulalip Veterans and their Families", and hereafter referred to as: "Tulalip Veterans" to request support and resources from the Tulalip Tribal Entities, Tulalip Board of Directors and other agencies as needed.

The committee members shall honor, respect, recognize and promote Tulalip's rich military heritage by sponsoring strategic activities that educate and remind the community of the sacrifices Tulalip Veterans have made for our freedom while at the same time inspire future generations to serve their people and their country.

The Veterans Committee shall serve as a liaison for Tulalip Veterans and shall bring the concerns of the Tulalip Veterans to the Veterans Department and the Board of Directors.

If you have a passion to help others and want to contribute and commit to supporting the goals of the Tulalip Veterans Committee, we encourage you to submit your Letter of Interest to the Tulalip Board of Directors for consideration.

The deadline for submission is 04/19/2021 by 4:30pm. You can submit your letter in person M-F 8:00am-4:30pm to the BOD Office Staff, or email your letter to bodofficestaff@tulaliptribes-nsn.gov.

voter turnout by Tulalip's membership. A whopping 1,413 total ballots were counted during the Tribe's March 20 election day.

Elder Pat Contraro sent shock waves through the reservation when she was declared top vote getter with 447. The stunning result was largely due to the hefty increase she received in just one year's time; last election she received only 176 votes. It's a true testament to her straight forward, no nonsense approach that she's ran on for years now. Her candidate platform never wavered from 'Transparency, Accountability, and Integrity!'

"I am honored that you have entrusted me to represent you - our membership," Pat announced via Facebook. "For the past several years many have allowed me into your homes. You have shared your needs, ideas, concerns, and aspirations for our Tribe. Our future holds challenges, but we can overcome them if we rise above the politics and go back to our teachings - which includes caring for our elders, our youth and one another.

"I look forward to working for and with you to restore jobs, increase housing, and make changes so our children may be assured of a positive future," she added. "I am eternally grateful to my tribal family, friends, and supporters who have remained and/or joined me in my journey during the past five years. I will serve you to the best of my ability and continue to listen and respond to your needs and concerns."

This year's second open Board seat ended up being a battle of incumbents, with Mel Sheldon, Jr. (385) outpointing Marlin Fryberg, Jr. (375) by only 10 votes. The super slim margin once again proved that when it comes to Tulalip elections, every vote truly does matter.

"To the 1,400+ members who voted in this election, thank you, your voice speaks volumes," reflected Mel after the election results were made official. "It shows how much our people care about their community. This was my closest election ever, outside of the year I got voted off, so it's a real learning opportunity for me. I will make it a priority to reach out and listen to those who feel their views aren't represented at the Board level, and look forward to building the momentum we created last year into even more economic opportunities for our people.

"As a Tribe, we are in a golden era of opportunity," he continued. "The continued success of our casinos and other business endeavors has created so much opportunity for our people. If they choose to capitalize on it, then they have opportunity for the highest quality of education, career opportunities in construction trades, and job opportunities in a wide range of tribal programs that will help us take our economic development to the next level."

The latest rendition of Tulalip's Tribal Council was sworn-in on the morning of Friday, April 2 by Chairwoman Teri Gobin. Extensive well wishes and messages of appreciation were given by one Board member after another to exiting councilmember Marlin Fryberg for his two-decades of service to his people. Then Pat and Mel raised their right hands and took their oaths to preserve, serve, and protect the constitution and bylaws of the Tulalip Tribe.

"As a team, I know we can get some really good work done," said Chairwoman Gobin as she looked towards her fellow Board members. "We have over 5,000 tribal members now. It's our entrusted responsibility to look out for their best interest, to create and develop necessary services that keep in mind our future generations, and to work together as a team for the benefit of all of our people. It's a challenge, but with a shared vision we can accomplish amazing things."

The adventure of Sparky and the Easter Bunny

By Calvin Valdillez

Giddy with excitement and anticipation, the young children of Tulalip, some sitting in their driveways, others peeking out their blinds every five seconds, were on the lookout for two magical creatures who joined forces over the Easter holiday weekend. Both are animals but walk upright like humans and stand at approximately 6'0" in height. The characters walked through the streets of several Tulalip neighborhoods, delivering candy, bubbles and toys to the youth, who were in total awe and were über-ecstatic to see a giant bunny and a life-sized dalmatian visit them - at their home, on their very-own reservation.

The Easter Bunny and Sparky the Fire Dog responded to the call when local community-led and funded organization,

Together We're Better, needed a little assistance spreading Easter joy to Tulalip families.

"It was important for us to do an event," expressed Together We're Better Founder, Malory Simpson. "Normally, we do a huge Easter egg hunt and multiple communities come out to celebrate, but COVID has interfered with a lot of events this year. Seeing the kids cooped up and not having anything really planned for them, we wanted to do something for the kids and bring Easter to the community."

Pre-pandemic, Together We're Better was known throughout Tulalip for their monthly potlucks and putting on exhilarating community events such as the Halloween-themed Trunk-or-Treat gathering. Together We're Better also collaborates and assists other local organizations with their events, such as the Aunties-in-Action for their periodic food distributions.

With gathering-limitations still in place, the organization decided to bring Easter eggs to the children this year as opposed to their annual tradition of hiding them. Drawing inspiration from the Tulalip Bay Fire Department's yearly Christmas-time Santa Run, Together We're Better partnered with the local fire station to present a similar festivity to the community.

On the afternoon of April 3, Malory, a group of Together We're Better volunteers, a number of firefighters, Sparky the Fire Dog, and the Easter Bunny gathered outside of the Tulalip Bay fire station. After the group convened for a quick game plan, the entire collective hopped to it, with baskets of candy in-hand, while escorted by a shiny fire engine and an EMS vehicle.

"Our main mission is to serve the community," said TBFD Firefighter, John Carlson. "Serving doesn't always mean emergency responses, it also means helping out and bringing some happiness, and today was a day exactly like that. A lot of people have been cooped up and felt kind of isolated, just kind of not in a normal state. This brought back a little bit of normalcy back to their lives. We certainly haven't done public events like we used to in the past, so it was really great for us too. It was refreshing to get out of the station and interact with the public. I love the pure joy and smiles. Some of the kids were shaking and dancing they were so excited to see us coming."

As the group delivered candy and other Easter goodies to the kids, they were in-turn awarded with smiles, laughter and love from the children who were happy to see the Easter bunny this year, as well as Sparky, although most Paw-Patrol fans mistook the friendly dalmatian for the show's lead-character, Marshall. Kids weren't the only ones to enjoy the event as many elders posted outside on their porches or driveways, greeting the procession while they made their way to the various neighborhoods within the TBFD's district, including Mission Highlands, Silver Village, Battle Creek and the Y-Site.

Malory exclaimed, "I loved it. It felt great to be out there. A lot of these kids, I worked at their school, so it was amazing seeing them. Their smiles and laughter make you feel really good inside.

Together We're Better is community funded. We were blessed with a little bit of a donation from the Tulalip events department. At the last minute they gave us some suckers and bubbles. But for the most part, it's community-driven and 100% community-funded. Just seeing the excitement was one of the best things about the event today, bringing some joy into the developments and seeing how happy the kids were to see the Easter Bunny and Sparky the Dalmatian."

If you are looking to get more involved with the community, Together We're Better, is always accepting donations, whether that is goods, money or your personal volunteered time. For more information, please contact Malory Simpson at (425) 905-9137.

Hare-Delivery:

TELA students receive books from Easter Bunny

By Calvin Valdillez

The Betty J. Taylor Early Learning Academy (TELA) has a long-standing relationship with one Peter Cottontail, famously known as the Easter Bunny. For the past six years, the bunny has journeyed to the sduhubš territory to celebrate his favorite holiday with the Academy's students. For a while, the bunny hosted the Easter Egg-travaganza which featured an egg-hunt and a photoshoot with the kiddos. Recently, beginning over the past couple years, the Easter Bunny and TELA began a new holiday tradition together by gifting the future generations of Tulalip a Native American-themed storybook they can enjoy with their families while learning the lifelong skill of reading.

"Literacy is important because we want our children to start reading," said Katrina Lane, TELA Family and Community Engagement Coordinator. "They aren't able to read on their own right now but if we read to them, they will learn to read even sooner. We also add-in the Native element, so they're able to see a piece of our culture in reading."

Talk about a fun way to get children between the ages of birth to five excited about reading! On the morning of April 1, the last school day before Easter weekend, the bunny began to make his rounds, hopping through the Academy's hallways and visiting over twenty classrooms.

The kids could not contain their joy upon seeing the bunny, shouting, 'Hi Easter Bunny!' and the, 'Easter Bunny is here!' while jumping up and down and rushing to their classroom windows to interact with the famous holiday character. The bunny, who was masked-up, showcased the importance of social distancing by taking health and safety precautions to limit the spread of the coronavirus, which prevented his annual trip to Tulalip last year when the school and Tribal government temporarily shut-down operations.

Moments prior to the book-delivery, Katrina shared, "Because of COVID we are masked-up and practicing social distancing and so is our bunny. This year he is able to bring them a book and remind them it's important to wear a mask and to social distance during COVID."

The children were delighted to receive their gift from the bunny. Some kids immediately began to flip through the pages and others held the book up-high over their heads, thanking the bunny for their new story, which is filled with fun traditional illustrations. This year, the kids took home Black Bear, Red Fox: Colours in Cree by Julie Flett (Cree- Métis) while the infants of the Academy received Black and White: Visual Stimulation Images for Babies by Morgan Asayuf (Tsimshian). TELA purchased the books at the Salal Marketplace giftshop at the Tulalip Resort Casino through a grant awarded to the Academy by the Tulalip Charitable Fund.

After another successful Easter-themed book-gifting event, TELA is excited to get the literary holiday tradition back on the bunny trail, promoting the magic of reading and hoping to engage their children in the activity both at home and in the classroom to set them up for a bright future.

Said Katrina, "Most Easter Bunnies deliver candy, our Early Learning Easter Bunny delivers cultural reading books to promote literacy because we feel it's important to share the love of a good book!"

Foraging + processing + preserving nettles (s̓cəd̓ʔx̓)

Submitted by AnneCherise Jensen, Tulalip SNAP-Ed Coordinator

It’s officially Spring! Stinging Nettles are finally starting to pop out of the nutrient dense Pacific Northwest soils. The first sign of Nettles is usually an indicator of warmer and longer days, ending the harsh winter months. There are a wide variety of ways you can consume, process, and use nettles in your everyday life.

Nettles are rich in nutrients, vitamins and minerals, adding health and vitality to your life. Foraging, processing and preserving nettles is a very sacred process, and should be done with care, for both cultural and safety reasons. In this article, we will discuss plant identification, foraging tips, processing and preservation of nettles. There is also a delicious sparkling nettle lemonade recipe provided for you and your loved ones to try at home.

Stinging Nettle, or s̓cəd̓ʔx̓, has been used as a traditional Coast Salish medicinal plant for thousands of years. This highly valued plant is often found in streambeds, forests and disturbed areas with rich wet soil, usually facing the sun. Stinging Nettles, can be found from the coast to the mountains, and are found in abundance on the lush Tulalip soils. Stinging Nettle, scientifically named Urtica dioica, is a perennial herb with opposite deep green leaves with serrated edges and tiny greenish flowers. The stems are square, and plants grow 3-7 feet tall annually. Harvesting season runs March - June each spring. Once the Nettle plant begins to seed in the warmer summer months, the leaves can only be used for drying purposes. If consumed raw past this point, Nettles can be toxic to the liver and kidneys. When harvesting Nettles, be sure to wear thick gloves as they will sting you! If stung, the stinging sensation can last anywhere to a couple hours to a couple days, depending on skin sensitivity. Be extra careful with children, as they can be more sensitive to the stings. The stalk and underside of leaves are covered with stinging hairs that rise from a gland containing formic acid.

Avoid harvesting in areas that are nearby pollutants, roads, pesticides and other chemicals. Cut off only the first 6 inches in the top of the plant. We do this to protect the plant and make sure it grows back the following year. Once you have your basket filled, the nettles can then be processed by blanching, drying or simply steaming them. Any of these methods will inhibit the formic acid glands (stingers) from stinging you. In this recipe, we will be using dehydrated nettles to make a sweet Nettle tea.

Processing Nettles

Air Dry Method (hot sunny day required)

Hang Dry Method

There are generally three common ways to process Nettles; blanching, steaming and dehydration. Each provides a unique way to consume and preserve the plant. Each can then be creatively crafted in a wide variety of drinks and dishes. Here are the three methods and some ideas for dishes to put on the dinner table.

Steaming: Steamed nettles, or sautéed nettles, are a great way to consume nettles in their most pure form. Since the nettles can’t be eaten raw in their original state, due to their intense sting, heat is required to break down the stingers on the plant. Once hot water or steam is administered after about 5-8 minutes, the nettles can be consumed like sautéed spinach, or broccoli. The steamed nettles can then be eaten plain or diced up and added into a side dish. Adding a bit of garlic, salt and pepper is a great way to enhance the flavor.

Blanching: Blanching is a very popular technique when it comes to preserving nettles for future use. There are three simple steps to blanching nettles. First, bring a hot pot of water to a boil, then reduce down to medium heat. Add the nettles to the pot, this allows the heat to soften and eliminates the stingers. Allow to stand in hot water for at least 5 minutes but no more than 10 minutes. Next, get a large glass bowl with ice and cold water inside of it. Transfer the nettles from the hot water into the cold water. Allow the nettles to cool and chill for approx. 10 minutes. This helps preserve the bright green color, as well as nutrient density. Remove nettles from ice cold water, onto a clean drying rag. Dab and gently dry the blanched nettles. At this point, you can place them into a freezer safe plastic bag, and freeze for future use. Blanched Nettles can then be made into pesto, be added into a fruit smoothie, whipped into a nettle butter, added into soups, and so much more!

Dehydrating: There are a few ways to dehydrate herbs; sun dry, hang dry and the dehydrate method. All methods work well, but vary on resources and preference. I personally like to air-dry my herbs, but it can take up to a week. Either way, be sure to rinse your foraged herbs in a colander before drying. This also allows any bugs to escape that may be hiding in your basket. P.S. don't forget to wear gloves - this is the prickliest process of all! Once your nettles are dehydrated, you can grind them into a powder and make them into a green, nettle powder. This preserves and keeps your nettles available to use all year round.

Dehydrator/Oven Method: Using heat is the quickest way to dry herbs. The dehydrator method requires a heat of 120-140 degrees F for about 12 hours in your average dehydrator. If you don't have a dehydrator, you can also use an oven. Place herb leaves on a cookie sheet one inch deep or less. Put herbs in an open oven on low heat, less than 180 degrees F, for 2-4 hours. To see if the herbs are dry, check if leaves crumble easily. Oven-dried herbs will cook a little, removing some of the potency and flavor.

Hang Dry Method: Gather 5-10 branches together and tie together with string or a rubber band. The smaller the bundle, the easier and faster they will dry. Put the bundle of herbs, stem-side up and hang them by the stem in a warm, well-ventilated room. You can do this by using string and clothespins, amongst other things. Your herbs may be dried and ready to store in as little as one week. This is personally my favorite method, and creates a fresh spring aroma in the home.

Nutritive Properties

Nettles are known to be one of the most nutrient dense plants on the Earth and are considered a super food in many cultures throughout the world! They contain a wide range of vitamins, minerals and antioxidants that help maintain the body's function and mobility. Nettles also contain a high amount of amino acids that are highly valuable chemicals used in the pharmaceutical, cosmetic and food industries. Nettles contain extremely high amounts of Vitamin C, vitamin A, Vitamin D, iron, sodium, potassium, phosphorus, calcium (29 times more than spinach), magnesium, silica, trace minerals and protein (more than beans). No wonder they are called a superfood. If you aren't already consuming nettles, you should be. (Krohn)

Sparkling Nettle Lemonade

Makes two, 16 ounce servings

Ingredients:

1 Fresh Nettle plant or 2 Tbsp. Dehydrated Nettle
4 TBSP Honey
2 Lemons, squeezed
2 cups Sparkling Mineral Water
2 cup filtered water
1 cup ice

Directions:

The first step requires making nettle tea. You can do this with either fresh or dehydrated nettles. Bring 2 cups of filtered water to a boil. Add fresh nettle or dehydrated nettle to the boiling water. If you are using dehydrated nettle, be sure to add it into a tea bag or tea dispenser. Allow herbs to steep in hot water for approx. 10 - 15 minutes.

Once you have your nettle tea, add 4 Tbsp. of honey while liquid is still warm and stir together. Allow to cool.

In a separate container, squeeze and juice the 2 lemons. You may get a few lemon seeds in there and will want to pull them out. You should get approx. ½ cup - 1 cup of lemon juice depending on the size of the lemons. You can always add extra if you prefer yours tarter. Add this to the chilled nettle tea. Stir thoroughly.

Place mixture in refrigerator and allow to chill. Once it gets to a cool temperature, add nettle lemon tea to a glass with ice. For every cup of tea, then add one cup of sparkling water, for a 1:1 ratio. Enjoy!
