Easter Run delivers smiles across Tulalip

Google embraces brighter future through young bot builders

By Micheal Rios

Presented by tech giant Google, a first-of-its-kind robotics camp took place over the weekend of April 1st at the Tulalip Youth Center. Nearly 100 eager youth participated in the free, two-day event that kicked off their Spring Break with a unique hands-on opportunity to dive into the robotics realm.

Designed for all students between 5th – 12th grade, regardless of previous robotics experience, the camp coordinators strived to build bridges of imagination between the Rez-bound Native participants and possible future careers in the computer science and engineering fields. Of course, that was simply a side to the main course of the kids designing and building an actual robot.

“I’m so thrilled to see all these kids show up because it proves to Google just how much our children need this type of STEM engagement,” explained Google test engineer Suzanne DePoe (confederated tribes of Siletz). “Our kids are so bright and aren’t given enough recognition for the knowledge that they have. I tell people all the time that when it comes to our Native American kids all you have to do is capture their imagination. Because once you do, they'll dazzle you with what they're capable of creating.

"That's why it's so important for us to get our kids outside of their comfort zones," she added. "Only then can they experience new things, gain new perspectives and see things they've never seen before so that they can then dream of bigger and bolder future for both themselves and their Tribes."

Suzanne is a member of Google's Aboriginal and Indigenous Network that is dedicated to product inclusion, social responsibility initiatives, and internal efforts related to hiring and retention. She was instrumental in coordinating the robotics camp, along with Tulalip education director Jessica Bustad and youth enrichment supervisor Sarah Murphy.

An opportunity to build robots and use them in a series of driving and programming skills challenges is what motivated the kids to be ready to go by 9:00 am on a Saturday and Sunday. Everything they engaged in was more than simply robotics, it was learning the basic essentials of computer science, which is all about promoting creativity and innovation.

"I was really excited for this robotics camp because I've really developed an interest for building stuff, meeting new people, and bonding with others who have common interests," said 16-year-old youth council member Faith Valencia. "I had never built anything close to this before nor anything remote-controlled, so this was an all-new experience that challenged me in the best kind of way. It was very difficult at first, especially the programming and coding, but with the help of my team we figured it out. Even if not everyone wants to be an engineer or work in computer sciences, being able to work with and troubleshoot new technologies is a basic life skill worth developing."

Computer science allows students to use their imaginations and develop new ideas and solutions. They can then use this knowledge in the future to one day create their own apps, design websites that build upon their tribal infrastructure, or develop new software programs or functional hardware to take their own business to the next level one day.

Teaching computer science to our already tech-savvy youngsters also helps to promote diversity and inclusivity in the ever-growing technology industry. The tech industry has historically been dominated by white men, but by teaching computer science to a diverse group of students like Tulalip's youth, tech companies like Google partnering with tribal education departments can help break down barriers to access and opportunity.

Promoting diversity in the computer science fields, which was witnessed at length at the two-day camp that resulted in Tulalip boys and girls lighting up with pure excitement and joy through various stages of robot building, is necessary to ensure future technologies are inclusive and accessible to everyone.

There are still many communities and families who lack access to technology and computer science education. By providing students with the opportunity to learn computer science, sovereign tribal nations can help to level the playing field and provide its people with the tools they need to succeed in the digital age. The importance of this sentiment was expressed by mother Dawn DePoe-Ike who journeyed all the way from Yakama in order for her twin sons, Nolan and Nathan, to participate in the bot building extravaganza.

"It's important for my sons to be exposed to everything the science technology era has to offer, especially hands-on learning activities, so they can know these things exist as an option for their future," shared Dawn. She is a teacher at Yakama tribal school and prioritizes her children understanding the larger context of thriving in the modern world.

Dawn continued, "When I look out at this camp and see my two boys along with all the other Native children building, programming, and working together, I can't help but think of everything our ancestors went through. From surviving the Sand Creek Massacre to surviving the Carlisle Indian Industrial School then the Chemawa Boarding School, plus all the things drugs and alcohol brought, it's just awe-inspiring to see that our young ones aren't just surviving, instead they are beginning to thrive."

EASTER RUN DELIVERS SMILES ACROSS TULALIP

By Calvin Valdillez

With a pocket full of treats and sweets and an armful of plastic Easter eggs, a local kid from Tulalip beamed with excitement on the afternoon of April 2. Still in awe from a visit with the Easter Bunny, the young man's mom spoke on his behalf, "He told me this is the best Easter ever! He met the Easter Bunny and gave him a hug." As the mother and son made their way back to their home, the boy looked behind his shoulder every now and again, stealing glances at the Easter Bunny, in hopes of giving him one last wave as the bunny continued his tour through Tulalip.

"It's always good to see the joy on the kids' faces, and the parents too. They are happy to see that their children are being thought about in our community," shared Malory Simpson, Founder of Together We're Better, the local non-profit that organizes the yearly Easter Run.

Time and time again, as the Easter Bunny arrived at different neighborhoods of the reservation, children jumped with joy, and many of the kids ran to the bunny with their arms wide open to receive a big hug from the loveable character.

Together We're Better has been delivering smiles across the reservation over the past decade. Every year the organization hosts a number of fun community-based events, such as the ever-popular Halloween gathering Trunk or Treat.

One of the many good things about Together We're Better is the fact that each of their events has amazing turnouts and unites hundreds of Tulalip brethren together for a good time. And between the number of volunteers who commit to working the events and all the donations of food, candy, toys, and sometimes cash, it goes without saying that Together We're Better is for the community, by the community.

Malory expressed, "Giving back to the community always feels really good. This is all community effort, so all of the donations were by Tribal members - Tribal members who are putting time and effort into stuffing eggs and buying prizes. Bags of candy were [regularly] dropped off on my porch. It makes my heart happy to see the community coming together to take care of each other."

The Easter Run is a fairly new event, and this was the third year that Together We're Better held the springtime celebration. In previous years, the organization hosted an Easter egg hunt for the people of Tulalip. However, the non-profit made the pivot to the Easter Run during the worldwide pandemic to eliminate the threat of spreading the virus.

Malory recalled that despite COVID, she wanted to continue with an Easter event, and she was inspired by the Tulalip Bay Fire Department's annual Santa Run. The kids and families who live within the Fire Department's district look forward to the Santa Run each year for a chance to meet St. Nick and also to donate non-perishable goods to the food bank at the Tulalip Church of God.

Malory reached out to Tulalip Bay Fire and formed a partnership with the department. So, in addition to the volunteers of Together We're Better, several volunteer firemen join in on the fun and help deliver goodies to the kids every Easter. And as an added bonus, the fire department recruits the nationally known fire prevention mascot, Sparky the Fire Dog, who dishes out high-fives and daps a plenty to the children during the Easter Run.

Captain Shockley of the local fire crew stated, "We're always eager for any opportunity to get out and create a positive impact, and to have more of that human connection with everybody in our community. It's a great way to see all the kids and all the extended families. We've been doing the Santa Run for many years, and the Easter Run is another way for us to get out and show our faces more. It's important for us to build those relationships because at times, we show up on not the best day for a lot of families. And if we've already formed those relationships of trust, that's huge for us. And also, we love taking part in an ongoing positive event."

The Easter Run has become so popular that Together We're Better has decided to stick with the event, even after gathering limitations were lifted on the reservation. And with all the smiles displayed on the little one's faces over the years, it's easy to see why the non-profit made that call.

Throughout the day, the group of volunteers walked the Y-Site, Battlecreek, Larry Price/Ezra Hatch, Silver Village, and Mission Highlands neighborhoods. They delivered Easter eggs to well over one hundred children. The Easter Run is quickly becoming one of the more popular events at Tulalip, and after each visit, the children are sure to leave with a good amount of treats and happy memories.

"I just love it," Malory exclaimed. "Their smiles and laughter make you feel really good inside. Just seeing their excitement was one of the best things about the event today. It's pretty fun to see all of their reactions and see how happy the kids are to spend some time with the Easter Bunny and Sparky the Dalmatian."

If you are looking to get more involved with the community, Together We're Better is always accepting donations, whether it's goods, funds, or your personally volunteered time. For more information, please contact Malory at (360) 913-1424.

How to talk to children about abuse

Submitted by Jade Carela

April is child abuse prevention month. As parents/teachers/caregivers we will teach the children in our lives about possible dangers such as pools, riding a bicycle, crossing the roads, or hot objects. One often neglected area to talk to children about is body safety. Something I often hear is, “I don’t let my children out of my sight, or with anyone who isn’t close family.” Do your children go to school or daycare? Do you have them around friends or family? Do they play with other kids at the neighbor’s house? Do they have play dates? The truth is 90% of children who are abused know their offender, and most of the time its someone in their family. At the Children’s Advocacy Center (CAC) we have seen abuse happen in all those different situations with children. The unfortunate truth is, we can’t be present to protect our children 100% of the time. But we can increase prevention efforts by empowering and equipping children with knowledge of what is wrong and that no one has the right to harm them. It’s also important that as adults, we are able to offer a safe space for kids to tell us if they have suffered abuse so that they aren’t stuck in shame and secrecy. With the help of “Our Kids Center” and an article published by Natasha Daniels, below I will list things you can teach the children in your life. Teach them the real names of their body parts. Don’t create nick names for vagina, breasts, penis, etc. When children feel comfortable utilizing the correct vocabulary for their body parts they can then relate correct information about their bodies.

- Teach them some body parts are private, and should not be touched by anyone unless its for medical or hygiene concerns. We no longer teach good touch/bad touch. We teach safe touch/unsafe touch or “secret touches”. Let them know some unsafe touches can tickle or feel good, and those are still not safe and to let you or a safe person know. This also means to teach children, its not okay to touch anyone else’s body.

- Teach them no one should ever take pictures of their private parts.
- Teach them they are the masters of their own bodies, and if they are touched in a way that makes them uncomfortable or doesn’t feel right to tell a safe person in their life. Tell them to trust their instincts. Don’t force children to hug family members or friends they don’t want to. There could be a reason they aren’t wanting too.
- Tell them there are no secrets in your home or with anyone else. Tell them if someone asks them to keep a secret, or to play secret games, or they will get in trouble if they tell the secret to

- let you or a safe person in their life know.
- Tell them they will never get in trouble if they tell you or a safe person about someone touching them. You will believe them, love them, and will keep them safe.
 - Play what if scenarios with children to get them thinking about how they would respond to certain situations. Ask children questions, such as if we were in the store and you got lost, what would you do? If someone touched you in an uncomfortable way and asked you to keep it a secret, what would you do? If I was late picking you up from school, and someone else offered to give you a ride home, what would you do?
 - Tell them body safety rules apply even with family, friends, and other children.

Again, there is no way to 100% prevent abuse from happening to children, but one of the best ways to combat it, is through educating them, and having open, honest conversations continuously. As children age it is great to continue to have reminders, and change the way you bring up the topic depending on the age of the child. It is also important as adults to recognize when children are in uncomfortable situations, and put a stop to it.

Heritage Students seeing the Big Picture

Submitted by Matthew Tait

As the Spring Trimester begins, we would like to share the amazing progress that has occurred at Heritage as we have transitioned from traditional school to the Big Picture Learning model. We shared the details of BPL as we began our new adventure back in the Fall and are now committed to more frequent updates and celebrations this Spring as our Seniors near graduation and our students continue to do amazing things both in school and in their Internships.

First of all, we have to acknowledge that change is hard, it is challenging, it requires patience, grace and growth. This adjustment to BPL has not been easy for students, parents, staff and community all for various reasons. But with change, we see growth and perseverance for our common goal, do what is best for our students to become college and career ready. We are committed to building a solid foundation for each student's future, and we are literally looking at one student at a time at Heritage.

First of all, we would like to recognize our 2nd Trimester Advisory All Stars, Savanna Black-Tomahawk, Raphael Gomez, Raylee Lewis, Matt Miranda, Logan Winegar, and Kyliah Elliot. These students have shown amazing growth, leadership and commitment to the educational process. These students are amazing leaders in our school and our community. They have pursued their learning this year in various ways and have exhibited what a model student looks like for their peers.

We also want to celebrate every student that has engaged in the Internship Program. As of right now, we have 40 Students that have secured an Internship or are actively pursuing an Internship and will start after Spring Break. We have students at Tulalip Bay Fire, Natural Resources, Lushootseed Language Department, Hibulb Cultural Center, Quilceda Tulalip Elementary and many other places. Our featured student photo is Raphael Gomez, who is doing his Internship as a cook with Taste of Aloha, a Hawaiian Cuisine in Marysville. If you have not visited there, we highly recommend it, and possibly you will see Raphael pursuing his dream of becoming a Chef.

Lastly we want to acknowledge our amazing community partnerships that we are building; Melissa Gobin with Natural Resources and Farmer Frog. Melissa is the new Outreach Coordinator and she has done an amazing job of setting up weekly Leaving to Learn opportunities for our students to engage in Natural Resources work starting after Spring Break to the end of the school year. We are excited for our students and staff to experience and learn how important Natural Resources are for the future of our Tribe. Farmer Frog is a non-profit organization that has a lot of experience in building school/community gardens. They are supporting our students in the planning and initial stages (1 year or so) of building a garden at our school. With this amazing opportunity, our students will be able to learn the importance of food sovereignty and also be able to learn about traditional plant species. Our students and community will have access to choosing what we have in our garden and also benefit from the fresh produce that is produced by that garden. The garden project is part of an Independent Project by Tauvery Chrisman, she started this in the Fall and now with the partnership, her dream is going to become a reality.
