October came and went in the blink of an eye. But before November arrived, the Tulalip community was sure to get in some spooky time fun during the season of candy and costumes. One of the more popular holidays on the reservation, the people get into the Halloween spirit as soon as Autumn has sprung and begin to deck their lawns and office spaces with creepy decorations at the turn of the season.

Earlier in the month, local non-profit Together We're Better held their annual Trunk or Treat gathering which was met with great success and served as the official kick-off to the Halloween season. Although there have been many Halloween department parties, school celebrations, and family get togethers, there were two events that many tribal families had circled on their calendars: the TELA Pumpkin Extravaganza and the Community Halloween Party.

TPD awards ceremony honors those who serve the community

By Wade Sheldon

On Wednesday, October 25, the Tulalip Police Department (TPD) Awards Ceremony became a day filled with joy and gratitude as the TPD and the Tulalip tribal government joined hands to celebrate and honor the extraordinary efforts of our dedicated police officers, staff, and residents.

They have all played a vital role in transforming our neighborhoods into safer, more vibrant, and inviting places to live. This heartwarming event was part of the Tulalip Police Department's ongoing commitment to recognize the heroes in our community who go above and beyond to make our city a better place.

Sean Edge, 13 years with Tulalip Police Department, said, "I wouldn't want to be a police officer anywhere else. I come from a family of fishermen, and to work in fish and wildlife is a great honor. It's important for me to protect our rights so my children and my children's children can fish the waters of their ancestors."

When asked what working in the Tulalip community means after a year and a half, Nicholas Aldridge with the TPD said, "It means always doing what needs to be done no matter the cost. It's also just that community, the people come together and rally around the TPD. I love working here. It makes me feel good when I come to work, and people are happy to see me."

"I'm a Tulalip tribal member and I get to serve my Tulalip tribal community, and that's always something I wanted to do since I was younger," said Alyshia Ramon, TPD officer. "I come from a family of domestic violence and drug addicts, and I wanted to be a role model to others so that they don't have to go through what I went through. Also, know that there are other pathways to success. I had to do a lot to transform myself. I'm a mother of six, and I had to drop 100 pounds to get in shape. To be a police officer, it takes hard work, dedication, perseverance, getting through adversity, and being strong mentally and physically.

Alyshia continued, "There's a new generation coming in, and I support all the people that want to put on the badge. It's a different culture, a different vibe with social media and stuff like that. Times have changed, and I think new police officers coming in will bring a different perspective and possibly change how policing is done."

Weavers Delight: Traditional teachings at the NNABA

By Wade Sheldon

Steeped in tradition forged by our ancestors, master weavers came from Canada, Oregon, Idaho, and all over Washington state to teach at the Northwest Native American Basketweavers Association (NNABA). The two-day event, October 28 to 29, was held at the Muckleshoot Casino in Tacoma.

Hundreds of attendees eagerly awaited their chance to learn traditional style teachings from weavers who have dedicated their lives to learning the ways of our ancestors. Creating clothing, baskets, and art connects us to our roots and creates strong bonds between one another when we share these teachings.

"Since Covid, this will be our first year back in four years," Teresa Harvey of Puyallup tribes said. "Everyone at the event belongs to the NNABA, and different tribes get to host. All the teachers at this event are master weavers, and they create different things you get to learn at each table. There is easy all the way to difficult, and you pick what you want to learn and sign up at the different booths. If you choose a hat, it may take you all day, or if you pick a different item, it may only take a couple of hours.”

Throughout the day, when someone finished an item, the announcer had them show the room what they had created. Eruptions of applause let the students know their accomplishment didn't go unnoticed.

“This has been a wonderful event, Alfred Lane, aka “Bud”, from the Siletz tribe in Oregon, said, “The Puyallup's have been wonderful hosts. There's a lot of support for NNABA. We are a non-profit and rely on help to put this thing on. It's a labor of love for everybody here. It's fantastic. One thing I would like to see is expanding our youth track; there's an area for the youth to learn. To me, that's the future, and I'm amazed at the interest they are taking. If you're not teaching that younger generation, or if there's a link missing in that chain, you're heading over a cliff at some point, and we must ensure that doesn't happen.”

When asked about the most challenging part about weaving, Bud replied, “Well, I always call it work, but the hardest part is the gathering. It's also one of the most enjoyable parts. You get to go out in the woods, pick some things, peel some things, then prepare them for the next step. I always say gathering and preparing is 90% of the process of making baskets. We are basket makers. All we need is a place to sit inside, a table, a chair, and some water. Then we can create.”

“I have been teaching for over five years,” Jamie Sheldon of the Tulalip tribes said. “The event was awesome; everyone was excited to be back. I love teaching and want more people to come and learn because basket weaving is a part of our culture. If I can teach someone from our tribe, and they go on to teach someone, then that is an accomplishment for me and the next generation.”

To know more about the Northwest Native American Basketweavers Association, visit www.nnaba.net. If you would like to learn how to weave baskets or jewelry, and you live around the Tulalip Reservation, Jamie teaches every Wednesday from 5 to 7 at the Hibulb Cultural Center.

Betty J. Taylor Early Learning Academy Pumpkin Extravaganza

Laughter echoed throughout the TELA hallways on the morning of October 27, as the children arrived to their school in full costume. It was a little too chilly for the academy's usual outdoor pumpkin patch, so dozens of mini pumpkins were scattered throughout one of the staff conference rooms. Upon picking out a pumpkin to call their own, they were able to visit a decorating station to adorn their gourds with stickers to make jack o' lanterns with wacky faces and silly smiles.

The students and their families participated in a number of activities including bouncy houses, caricature portraits, and face painting. A cute highlight of the day was when the kids bravely walked through the spooky halls of the academy and visited their teachers while trick-or-treating and participating in a variety of carnival style games!

"I think it's important to show that we're just not a school, we're a community, we're a family, and we love interacting with one another," said Absyde Decoscos, TELA Family Engagement Coordinator. "And it's also important to show to the children that it's not a separation between teachers and family, we're all together and here for them. It's good for the kids to see us all interacting together. It turned out good. It's really fun. They loved seeing us all dressed up and we loved seeing them dressed up."

Tulip Community Halloween Party

The Community Halloween Party returned for the first time since 2019 and did so in a big way. The party was jumping throughout the entire four-hour window on October 29, and hundreds of families came out to showcase their creative costumes. This was the type of event that the kids of the community will fondly look back on years from now, just off that feeling of togetherness as everyone from event planner to event goer had a hand in making the night special, recreating those ghoulish time vibes from the days of old, before the COVID pandemic.

Families had a blast at the monster mash where there were numerous games, activities, pizza, and also a costume contest and a pumpkin carving contest. DJ Monie had the eerie tunes bumping and had the crowd at her command during the popular cake walk to close out the evening. A heartwarming thing to witness at this year's party was members of the local recovery community working hard – setting up activity stations before the start of the event, manning said stations in full costume during the entire event, and sticking around until the very end to break down tables and help clean up the teen center, but most of all interacting with the people and getting reacquainted into the community in a good, healthy way.

Said DJ Monie after the party, "We had a blast today! Thank you to everyone that came, and for the crew that helped make it happen. Also, thanks to the judges that volunteered for the costume contests. Happy Halloween everyone!"

The old Q should be a teen center

My name is Richard Kass. I've lived in my Tulalip community my whole life. I just want to share some ideas I've had on my mind and in my heart for a long time now.

I'm currently incarcerated and I'll be the first to admit I haven't made the best of choices in my life. Nor have I been the best role model for our youth or even my on youth. I just want to make that clear, that I'm man enough to own that. All I can do is try and be better.

I in no way blame my childhood in my life, growing up on the rez, for the choices I've made. I had a great childhood, rom watching my mom pull all the guys out of the mud under our famous old Boom City, to late night dances at the Boys and Girls Club teen night, to break dancing in the street in the middle of the night with Hazen Shopbell.

Anyway, my point is, I feel a lot of that has been lost. Seems like nothing is being built to better things for our youth. I'm sure there's a lot of programs but what about after 5-6 p.m.? After all that closes, there's the streets to run and sadly what's in our streets? The drug pandemic. It's sad to see so much youth come through jail at such a young age; going through the same pain, putting their family through the same pain. I can't take back the choices I've made, the pain I've caused my family, my community, my kids, but I can say I'm sorry to all and send my love and promise that I've done my best to learn from each and every choice I've made - good or bad.

The moral of my story is, and I'm asking all of Tulalip to back my thoughts on this, ever since the Q was built, and every time I see the old one, I see something for our youth to escape the dangers of the streets to. Because that's what they turn to, drinking and using at a young age.

When I was young, our dances went until 2 a.m. sometimes. But we weren't out doing other bad things. My point is, the old Q is big enough for maybe a 10-lane bowling alley, an arcade, and little food court spot for them to have dances and a DJ. The old Q should be a family/teen fun center, open until at least midnight on weekends, and 10 p.m. weekdays. What else are we gonna do with it, take it down? I remember going there as a kid to see my mother at work. That would be heartbreaking.

This has been on my mind since the day it closed. I just thought I'd share.

Thank you,
Sending love and prayers,
Ricky
